National Child Abuse Prevention Month, 2005

A Proclamation by the President of the United States of America

Our Nation has a responsibility to build a safe and nurturing society so that our young people can realize their full potential. During National Child Abuse Prevention Month, we renew our commitment to preventing child abuse and rededicate ourselves to working together to ensure that all children can have a bright and hopeful future.

Creating a protective environment for our young people requires the shared commitment of individuals, families, and faith-based and community organizations. Parents and family members are the first and most important influence in a child's life. A safe and stable family can provide children with a foundation of love and security that encourages positive growth and development. Federal, State, and local government officials can also improve the lives of our young people by doing all they can to keep children safe from harm.

Together, we can protect our future generations so that they can realize the opportunities of our Nation. By providing help and hope to our young people, we will build a better and more compassionate world for our children and grandchildren.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, GEORGE W. BUSH, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and laws of the United States, do hereby proclaim April 2005 as National Child Abuse Prevention Month. I encourage all Americans to protect our children from abuse and neglect and to help ensure that every child can grow up in a secure and loving environment.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand this first day of April, in the year of our Lord two thousand five, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and twenty ninth.

Letter from the Assistant Secretary

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH & HUMAN SERVICES

ADMINISTRATION FOR CHILDREN AND FAMILIES
Administration on Children, Youth and Families
1250 Maryland Avenue, S.W.
Washington, D.C. 20024

Dear Participants:

On behalf of the Administration for Children and Families at the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), I welcome you to the 15th National Conference on Child Abuse and Neglect, "Supporting Promising Practices and Positive Outcomes: A Shared Responsibility."

The theme of this conference underscores our knowledge and reaffirms our commitment to learn from each other and do some of the most important work any of us will ever undertake: helping to protect children and youth from abuse and neglect.

It is the commitment of professionals and community members like you that will help to provide a better tomorrow for children and families. Working together, we can make a difference. The recently reauthorized Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (CAPTA) provided a total of $16.6 million in increased funding this year for States under the President's budget. It provides another opportunity for us to review the work we have completed to improve Child Protective Services systems and community-based prevention efforts, for instance, and to plan for the work that lies ahead.

I invite you to explore all of the opportunities provided at this conference to learn about the variety of approaches that can be taken in response to child maltreatment and to share your expertise with your colleagues.

President George W. Bush, HHS Secretary Mike Leavitt and I support your tireless efforts performed each and every day. I hope this conference will be a productive one so more kids can grow up healthier, happier, and free from abuse. God bless your good work for children and families.

Dear Colleagues:

It is an honor and a pleasure to welcome you to our Fifteenth National Conference on Child Abuse and Neglect, Supporting Promising Practices and Positive Outcomes, a Shared Responsibility. As this theme suggests, we come together here in Boston with optimism and a shared hope that by continuing to work together, we can indeed create a better world for our children.

The week ahead is filled with nationally renowned speakers, experiential learning opportunities, cutting edge workshops offered by our colleagues, and the chance to rejuvenate and connect with our professional community in an affirming way. I hope that you will take full advantage of all the Conference has in store for you.

I wish you a productive and exciting week, as well as a pleasant stay in Boston, a wonderful host city.

Sincerely,

Dear Friends:

On behalf of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, it is my pleasure to extend warm greetings as you gather for the 15th National Conference on Child Abuse and Neglect.

My Administration is committed to the safety and well-being of all children in the Commonwealth. Massachusetts and the city of Boston are proud to serve as your hosts. During your time here, I hope you will have a chance to visit some of the wonderful cultural and historical attractions in and around the city.

Again, I welcome all the researchers, practitioners, policy makers and other distinguished guests to this conference. Lieutenant Governor Kerry Healey, Department of Social Services Commissioner, Lewis H. Spence, and I would like to thank you for your tremendous work, and offer our best wishes for a successful event.

Sincerely,

Marylou Sudders
President and Chief Executive Officer
Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children 99
Summer Street
Boston, Massachusetts 02110

Dear Ms. Sudders:

I am pleased to welcome the 15th National Conference on Child Abuse and Neglect to Boston and I congratulate the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children for being selected by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services as the local host agency.

The City of Boston is proud to serve as the site of the nation's premiere conference on child abuse and neglect prevention and treatment. MSPCC has long been a champion for children and families in our community. MSPCC's legacy of strengthening families through effective advocacy and services is a part of what I see all across this great city—people working together to make Boston a better place for children to grow, pursue their dreams, and become happy and healthy adults.

I invite conference participants to explore Boston, its rich history, and its many neighborhoods. From the first publicly supported municipal library in the United States to the John F. Kennedy Library and Museum, from the Boston Marathon to the historic Freedom Trail, the city offers an exciting variety of events and activities.

Thank you for your commitment to children and families. I extend my best wishes for a successful conference and I hope our visitors have an enjoyable stay in the City of Boston.

Sincerely,

/s/

Letter from the Project Director

15th National Conference on Child Abuse and Neglect
Supporting Promising Practices & Positive Outcomes:
A Shared Responsibility
April 18 - 23, 2005 • Boston, MA

Dear Colleagues and Friends,

Supporting Promising Practices and Positive Outcomes: A Shared Responsibility, the theme of the 15th National Conference on Child Abuse and Neglect, encourages us to collaborate across disciplines to maximize resources and provide more effective services to protect our children and strengthen their families. Toward that end, we hope this Conference acts as a catalyst for expanding your support networks among colleagues, and provides new knowledge and enhanced skills.

Many people collaborated to bring the 15th National Conference to fruition. We extend our deepest appreciation to Susan Orr, Associate Commissioner, and Children's Bureau, who sets the overall tone for the Conference and provides direction. To Catherine Nolan, Director of the Office on Child Abuse and Neglect, and Irene Bocella, Federal Project officer for the Conference, we express our gratitude for their leadership in the design of this extraordinary educational program and their thoughtful guidance throughout the planning and implementation process.

The National Planning Committee worked diligently to ensure that the Conference program reflects the diversity of the field and opens the door to emerging leaders and innovative approaches to practice. It has been a privilege and an honor to work with the co-sponsoring organizations. Their dedication to the field and to these national educational conferences is an example of shared responsibility in practice.

We gratefully acknowledge the staff and volunteers of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, our local host, Marylou Sudders, its President and Chief Executive Officer, and Julie Farber, the Director of Policy, Program Development, and Evaluation. Their dauntless energy and resourcefulness in the execution of tasks critical to the success of the Conference is a remarkable gift to the field.

To Kim Amos, Associate Project Director, and to all Conference staff, we express our heartfelt thanks and appreciation. Their hard work and commitment to excellence have been essential to the planning, organization, and implementation of this Conference.

It has always been a challenge and an honor to serve as the Project Director for the National Conferences. I hope that you will enjoy the city of Boston and that this year, as in past years, you will take full advantage of the numerous opportunities for growth.

With warm regards,

/s/

- Saturday, April 238:00 a.m. – 11:00 a.m.

CONFERENCE OFFERINGS

All sessions reflect the Conference theme, Supporting Promising Practices and Positive Outcomes: A Shared Responsibility, and correspond to one of the six Learning Clusters identified below:

1. Bridging Child Maltreatment Research and Practice
2. Protecting Children through Strengthening Families
3. Developing and Sustaining Collaboration
4. Focusing on the Frontline
5. Reframing the System to Promote Positive Outcomes
6. Treating and Intervening with Children to Improve Outcomes

Pre-Conference Seminars

A series of Pre-Conference Seminars highlights critical issues in the field of child maltreatment from a multidisciplinary perspective. These seminars are scheduled on Monday afternoon and all day Tuesday.

Experiential Learning Opportunities (ELOs)

Attendees have an opportunity to visit local programs to learn firsthand about innovative practices and to participate in alternative methods of serving families and children, supporting program staff, and engaging community representatives. ELOs take place on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday.

Plenary Sessions

Plenary sessions provide an opportunity for all participants to come together to hear nationally recognized speakers who have been invited to share their knowledge and experience and to serve as a catalyst to supporting promising practices and positive outcomes. Keynote speakers address participants during each of the Plenary Sessions (Tuesday through Friday) and at the Closing Luncheon on Saturday.

Mini-Plenary Sessions

Nationally recognized speakers address topics that relate to the Conference theme at the Mini-Plenary Sessions. These are scheduled Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday mornings, immediately following the Plenary Sessions.

Workshops

Experts in the field of child abuse and neglect present more than 150 knowledge-building Workshops throughout the day on Wednesday through Friday and on Saturday morning.

Poster Sessions

Visual presentations or Poster Sessions are made available to Conference participants to illustrate the results of innovative programs and methods that relate to one or more of the Learning Clusters. Participants may view Poster Sessions Wednesday through Friday in the Republic Ballroom Foyer, located on the second floor Plaza Level of the Sheraton Boston Hotel.

Roundtables

Roundtable sessions grant participants an opportunity to debate views, raise questions, and develop policy recommendations on critical issues with national and regional political figures and child welfare professionals. Roundtables are offered on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday.

Skills Seminars

Skills Seminars provide a three-hour, intensive training session designed to enhance existing skills and to teach new techniques. Limited to 20-30 participants, Skills Seminars are scheduled for Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday afternoons and Saturday morning.

Film Forum

Selected films and videos will be shown Monday through Saturday on closed circuit television in the guest rooms at the Sheraton Boston Hotel (Channel 36). A listing of the films and viewing times is included in the back section of this Program.

About Boston

Host of the 15th National Conference on Child Abuse and Neglect, the city of Boston, known as America's Walking City, also is one of America's oldest cities. Over 200 years of history beckon visitors to explore.

Boston belongs to a diversity of people whose heritage is drawn from every corner of the world. It is a city packed with Revolutionary historical sites, remarkable architecture, great art venues, lively sidewalk cafes, and diverse shopping opportunities. Located on the Charles River and Boston Harbor, residents and visitors welcome the opportunity to enjoy the outdoors and waterfront. The city is also home to America's oldest public park, the Boston Common. A place to graze sheep and cattle until 1830, today the Boston Common is a beautiful park for strolls and picnics, as well as the setting for various entertainment productions and charity fitness events.

Boston numbers more cultural organizations per capita than many other major cities, including New York and Chicago.

Some of Boston's most enduring attractions include the John F. Kennedy Library and Museum, the New England Aquarium, the Children's Museum, and the Museum of Science. Culture lovers flock to the Museum of Fine Arts, the flower-filled courtyard of the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, the Boston Symphony, and the Boston Ballet. The Red Sox, the Patriots, the Bruins, the Celtics, and the Revolution provide professional sports league action.

In the heart of downtown Boston, Faneuil Hall Marketplace serves as the seat of American history and the site of the country's most famous shopping and dining experiences. For over 250 years, the marketplace has played an integral role in the life of Boston's residents. Faneuil Hall Marketplace, adjacent to historic Faneuil Hall, is bordered by the financial district, the waterfront, the North End, Government Center, and Haymarket.

A most accessible city, Boston's reputation as a walking city actually relies on the creation of one of America's first historic walking tours, The Freedom Trail. The Freedom Trail Foundation strives to preserve this perfect introduction to Colonial Revolutionary Boston. The Freedom Trail leads the visitor to 16 historical sites in the course of two to three hours, covering 250 years of America's most significant past and highlighting Boston as the unique city it truly is.

Boston also possesses such unique cultural treasures as the new Dreams of Freedom Museum, the Museum of Afro American History, and the African Meeting House, the oldest African-American church building still standing in the United States. The Black Heritage Trail meets the Freedom Trail and takes visitors through Boston's Beacon Hill neighborhood, recounting the early history of Boston's African-American community.

Boston

Also noticeable throughout Boston and across the river in Cambridge are the large number of students who flock to the city each fall to attend the 74 higher education institutions. The Boston area is home to Harvard University, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Boston College, and Boston University, to name only a few. The presence of these colleges and universities draws students and professors with various academic and cultural backgrounds, further enriching the community.

Our Conference kicks off the same day the city of Boston hosts its 109th Boston Marathon. The Boston Marathon, the world's oldest annual marathon, ranks as one of the most prestigious road racing events, distinguishing itself as the pinnacle event within the sport of road racing by virtue of its traditions, longevity, and method of gaining entry into the race.

Make the most of your trip to Boston by taking advantage of all the city has to offer!

Special Events and Activities

The following Special Events and Activities have been arranged for participants in the 15th National Conference on Child Abuse and Neglect. The cost of each event is noted, and transportation will be provided to and from the Conference hotels.

Monday, April 18, 2005

Boston Marathon Viewing

12:00 – 4:00 p.m. (On Your Own)

Come line the route and cheer the runners of the country's oldest and most famous marathon. The 109th Boston Marathon starts at 12:00 noon. By 2:00, the crowd expects the first of the anticipated 20,000 runners to cross the finish line of the 26.2 mile marathon. The race ends on Boylston, the same street as the Conference hotel.

Tuesday – Friday

Fitness Walk

6:30 – 7:30 a.m. daily (Rain or Shine)

Unique to Boston, this early morning workout increases your heart rate while you enjoy city sites. Wear comfortable walking shoes and meet in the Sheraton Boston Hotel lobby at 6:30 a.m. Your walk leader, Mike Lalor of Teammates, and a former NHL player, Stanley Cup winner, and certified fitness trainer, promises to wake you up, work you out, and show you Boston all at the same time. Advance registration is required on the Conference Registration Form, the Special Events section.

Cost: $5 pp per day

Wednesday, April 20, 2005

The North End Experience

6:00 – 9:00 p.m.

Treat yourself to dinner and a self-guided and self-paced stroll of Boston's North End. Linger at an Italian bistro or go in search of the best prosciutto in one of Boston's oldest residential neighborhoods, a delightful labyrinth of narrow streets and exotic marketplaces. Pizza, homemade pastas, fresh breads, imported olive oil, cappuccino and espresso all await your pleasure as does an indulgence from one of the neighborhood's most famous Italian bakeries, Mike's Pastry.

Cost: No charge

Transportation to and from North End will be provided.

Ghosts & Gravestones

6:00 – 9:00 p.m.

Dare to take a frightseeing tour – a lighthearted and spine tingling peek into the dark side of Boston history! A two hour trolley ride unveils many a Boston mystery – shedding light on Edgar Allen Poe, Lizzie Borden, and other native celebrities. Tales of historical haunts and heroes, ghosts and ghouls entertain and spook the visitor in a walk about two of Boston's oldest burial grounds. (Please be aware that participants should be able to manage a short walk uphill and to climb a few stairs. Remember to dress warmly and to wear comfortable shoes.)

Cost: $28 pp

Transportation to and from the tour will be provided.

Thursday, April 21, 2005

Walking Tours of Boston

6:00 – 8:00 p.m.

SEE BOSTON AT HER BEST — BY FOOT! RAIN OR SHINE!

The Victorian Architecture of the Back Bay

Learn the history behind the Victorian architecture of Boston's infamous Back Bay during this 90-minute guided tour. The tour highlights one of America's richest collections of art and architecture. Its treasures include Trinity Church, the Boston Public Library, and stately rows of brownstone mansions. (Remember to wear those good walking shoes and bring a warm jacket.)

Cost: $10 pp

Transportation to and from the tour will be provided.

Beacon Hill

A National Historic District, Beacon Hill intrigues with its working gas lamps, ancient elms, and brick sidewalks. To add to the charm, its 19th-century row houses are protected by architectural restrictions. A wander down Mount Vernon Street shows the visitor Beacon Hill at its finest. Charles Bulfinch, Boston's Federal period architect and one of the developers of Beacon Hill, designed several buildings on this street, including the State House. Be sure to notice details as you walk along. Include Louisburg Square in your tour, the address most associated with Boston wealth and privilege. By daylight or at twilight, "The Hill" casts a spell of enchantment. (Please be aware that participants should be able to manage walking one mile, both uphill and on cobblestone streets.)

Cost: $10 pp

Transportation to and from the tour will be provided.

The Black Heritage Trail

Explore the history of Boston's 19th century black community with a walk along the Black Heritage Trail. Visit 10 historic sites, including stops at the Lewis and Harriet Hayden House, the Underground Railroad, and the Robert Gould Shaw and 54th Regiment Memorial, a testimony to the service of blacks during the Civil War. Explore the African Meeting House, the oldest standing black church in the United States, the center of political activity, and the very heart of the Heritage Trail. Also tour the Abiel Smith School, the nation's first public school for African American children. (Please be aware that participants should be able to manage a 1.6 mile walk.)

Cost: $10 pp

Transportation to and from the tour will be provided.

Boston Harbor Boat Cruise

6:00 – 9:00 p.m. (Mass Bay Line)

Relax as you experience Boston by sea. The Boston Harbor Boat Cruise invites you to enjoy a splendid buffet together with the entertainment of a disc jockey and dancing beneath a spectacular skyline view. The Lobster Bake Buffet menu serves New England clam chowder, boiled live lobster with butter or a ten-ounce sirloin strip steak, corn-on-the-cob, coleslaw, baked potato, rolls and butter, seasonal fruits, and coffee and tea.

Cost: $35 pp

Transportation to and from the cruise will be provided.

Friday, April 22, 2005

Boston Duck Tour

"ONE BIG SPLASH AND THE REST IS HISTORY!"

6:00 – 7:30 p.m.

This fully narrated historic tour takes place in an authentic World War I amphibious vehicle, traveling through the streets of Boston and then into the Charles River. The fun begins as soon as passengers come aboard! Come rain or shine, one of the legendary conDUCKtors greets visitors and navigates them to all the sites that make Boston the birthplace of freedom.

Cost: $24 pp

Transportation to and from the tour will be provided.

Faneuil Hall Experience

6:00 – 10:00 p.m.

Shuttle to Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market for dinner and shopping in the more than 150 shops and restaurants for a self-guided and self-paced evening. Faneuil Hall Marketplace proves the lively core of Boston's historic waterfront. From the break of dawn 'til the wee hours, its bubbling brew of shops, restaurants, performers, and events invites visitors to food, fun, and great people-watching. Bull Market Push Carts showcase the colorful wares of over 100 New England artisans and entrepreneurs.

Cost: No charge

Transportation to and from Faneuil Hall will be provided.

Tickets are required for admittance to all Special Events and Activities. Tickets will be available for pick up at the Special Events booth in the Conference Registration area. Special Event tickets are non-refundable!

Pre-Conference Seminar A

Critical Incident Stress for Child Welfare Workers: What Is It and What Can Be Done?

Introducing the concept of critical incident stress, the seminar strives to increase participant knowledge of what incidents may cause such stress, to identify symptoms, to create an awareness of individual and group interventions, and to highlight steps to prevent critical incident stress. Presenters report the findings of a quantitative and qualitative research project with thirty child protection workers in Northern Illinois. The study found that these workers do experience critical incident stress (also known as secondary or vicarious trauma) and that crisis intervention contributed to a marked reduction in symptoms. The seminar includes a discussion of the child welfare system as a culture and the barriers as well as opportunities it presents to addressing these significant issues for child welfare workers.

Pre-Conference Seminar B

A Therapist's Role in Child Abuse Investigations

To help coordinate efforts of therapists and investigators in child abuse investigations, this seminar discusses the process of the investigation and treatment in the context of working collaboratively to promote positive legal and psychological outcomes for child victims of abuse. Uniquely designed from an investigative perspective, the session strives to enhance the therapist's understanding of child abuse investigations and their impact on the child and on treatment issues. At the same time, the investigator benefits from a better understanding of the role of the child's therapist as a source of information, thus serving to enhance the investigator's case. Presenters demonstrate how to successfully incorporate the mental health professional into the investigation.

Pre-Conference Seminar C

Identifying and Serving Child Victims of Trafficking

Several speakers representing the fields of child welfare, law enforcement, and legal advocacy consider the remarkable collaboration necessary to meet the complex needs of child victims of trafficking. This seminar focuses on desirable systemic and emergency responses on the part of programs funded at local, state, and Federal levels to maximize resources available for the child's protection. The presentation enables participants to develop the skills necessary to identify and serve child victims of trafficking and thereby to generate new awareness and knowledge. Presenters also facilitate dialogue to concentrate on innovative, holistic, and collaborative approaches to providing an effective continuum of care for child victims that reflect best practices.

Family Group Decision Making: A Rich Partnership Between Families and Systems

Close to 150 U.S. communities now implement family group decision making (FGDM) initiatives, a significant increase from the five communities identified in a 1995 survey on innovative practices and system reform conducted by the American Humane Association. Due to the burgeoning interest in this approach, seminar presenters provide a historical overview of FGDM together with philosophies embodied in its practice, as well as define terms, describe FGDM models and processes, and discuss approaches to creating and sustaining partnerships with families and within communities and steps to beginning implementation strategies. The seminar includes stimulating training exercises to challenge participants to fully consider the potential positive outcomes of this approach.

Supervision Strategies to Optimize Problem-Solving, Healthy Boundaries, and Productive Interaction

Interactive in its approach, this seminar showcases the most recent Professional Development Module on Supervision created by the training program of a nationally recognized comprehensive child abuse prevention agency for high risk families of young children. Utilizing a reflective supervision paradigm and strategies, the seminar connects this approach to frontline worker retention, stress management, burnout prevention, secondary trauma levels, and positive outcomes for children and families. Presenters share with participants the stages to developing an agency culture of reflective supervision and accompanying relevant tools of support.

Family Drug Treatment Courts: Models and Outcomes

The family drug treatment court (FDTC) approach involves court-based collaborations created to protect children from abuse and neglect; the provision of alcohol and other drug treatment; and safe, timely, and permanent homes for children. Presenters discuss various FDTC models, focusing on the development of family drug treatment courts, planning and implementation issues, and innovative practices. Other issues to be discussed include training and practice changes that occur in the child welfare and substance abuse realms as a result of the creation of a FDTC; the importance of collaboration; and the complexities of cross-system data collection and outcome monitoring. The seminar concludes with preliminary outcome findings from several FDTC models, including the Sacramento Dependency Drug Court.

Families First Health and Support Center at the Community Campus: Developing and Sustaining Collaboration

*100 Campus Drive, Suite 12
Portsmouth, NH 03801*

9:00 a.m. – 1:00 p.m.

Families First Health and Support Center successfully co-locates and collaborates with eight other social service agencies since the creation of the Community Campus by the Foundation for Seacoast Health in November 1999. This approach of providing seamless services benefits thousands of individuals and families, as well as agency staff. To better serve the Greater Seacoast community, Families First, a community health, dental, and family support center, as well as a mobile program for the homeless, works with Head Start; the Community Child Care Center; the Portsmouth Early Education Program for preschoolers with disabilities; the New Heights teen center; Info Link, which is phone and Web information and referral; Stepping Stones for adults with a brain injury; and the Child Advocacy Center for children who are victims of sexual abuse.

Two ten-minute videos describe for visitors the Community Campus and Families First. A panel of representatives from the nine agencies plans to share their collaboration experiences, followed by a tour of the Community Campus. An on-site café is available, serving a variety of food items at a nominal price.

Intervening with Batterers: A Child Protection Service Imperative

The presenter leads participants in an exploration of how child protection agencies can improve their capacity to address the risk that batterers represent to children and families. By providing alternative strategies for intervening in domestic violence cases, an agency can avoid unnecessarily re-victimizing the adult victim and shift the responsibility for the risk to the children onto the person creating that risk. Following a review of efforts in Connecticut to improve Child Protection Service (CPS) response to domestic violence perpetrators, the seminar provides participants with the opportunity to examine CPS practice in their own agencies, to discuss barriers to implementing batterer intervention strategies, and to identify concrete steps to achieving system change.

Strengthening Child Protection Systems through Parent Leadership

Introducing a groundbreaking Parent Leadership Training Model, this seminar presents proven strategies for recruiting, training, and supporting parents in leadership roles within the child protection system. Presenters showcase the success of the project in one county child protection department, highlighting the process of establishing a Parent Leadership Task Force composed of parents, administrators, and frontline social workers; strategies to support parents as effective change agents within the child protection system; and various ways child protection staff partner successfully with parents. Initial project evaluation findings demonstrate that parents gain new leadership skills and actively participate in a wide range of leadership roles when involved in the child protection system.

Should Exposure to Domestic Violence Be Defined as Child Maltreatment: Issues for Policy and Practice

Presenters review the effects of children's exposure to domestic violence, building on national research and the clinical findings of the Child Witness to Violence Project at Boston Medical Center, one of the first programs in the country to work exclusively with child bystanders to violence. In addition to identifying current State laws and policies regarding child exposure to domestic violence together with the policy and practice standards of the Massachusetts Department of Social Services, the session considers the perspective of battered women in regard to child protection issues, as well as the protection of battered women. A case study illustrates a framework for assessing risk to the child and ways child protection services can be involved in a manner supportive to women victims of domestic violence.

The Science of Early Childhood Development: Closing the Gap Between What We Know and What We Do

Jack P. Shonkoff, M.D.

Dr. Jack P. Shonkoff, co-editor of From Neurons to Neighborhoods and Chair of the National Scientific Council on the Developing Child, sets the stage for an exciting program focused on how science can be used to guide promising practices in the care of children who have been abused or neglected. The presentation begins with an overview of the core concepts of early childhood and brain development and then moves on to an exploration of the extent to which some of our current policies and programs are disconnected from that knowledge base. Those who attend this presentation will leave with a deeper understanding of how we can close the gap between what we know and what we do to promote the healthy development of young children who have been maltreated.

The Conference Reception follows the Opening Plenary Session in the Constitution Ballroom, Second Floor, Plaza Level, of the Sheraton Boston Hotel. The Adrian Ross Jazz Quartet will entertain with traditional jazz favorites.

*The Angels Without Wings Choir promises a joyous welcome in song, setting an inspirational tone to the opening plenary and to our commitment to the goals of the 15th National Conference on Child Abuse and Neglect. Reverend Dr. Leroy Attles, Pastor of the St. Paul African Methodist Episcopal Church in Cambridge, leads the group of 115 youngsters, ranging from age four to twelve. Their voices soar each Sunday at church services and throughout the year in performances for their community. The Role of the Judge in Collaborative Efforts to Reform the System

Judge Constance Cohen

Judge Constance Cohen, Juvenile Court Judge for the Fifth Judicial District of Iowa since 1994, focuses on the significant role the judge plays in convening stakeholders and providing leadership in joint disciplinary efforts to improve and reform the system. The presentation emphasizes the need for grassroots participation on the part of all players if promising initiatives to achieve positive outcomes for children and families are to succeed. In her current appointment, Judge Cohen adjudicates cases involving child abuse and neglect, termination of parental rights, adoptions, juvenile delinquency, and involuntary hospitalization commitments. She also serves as a frequent lecturer at training events for attorneys, judges, social workers, foster parents, and Court Appointed Special Advocates.

Lisa Renee Putman Excellence in Direct Service Award

The Lisa Renee Putman Excellence in Direct Service Award was established to recognize and honor the valuable role that frontline child protective service workers play in the health and safety of our nation's children. Every two years, at the National Conference on Child Abuse and Neglect, the award is presented to a direct service worker who exemplifies the qualities of services to children and families that made Lisa Renee Putman an outstanding professional. Through this prestigious award, the legacy of Lisa Renee's commitment to the protection of children will live on for years to come.

MARY ANN KNAEBEL, Social Worker and Advocate
Adolescent Unit, Department of Children and Family Services, Everett, Washington

Mary Ann Knaebel, an exemplary frontline social worker and advocate, exemplifies the spirit and compassion it takes to provide child welfare services to adolescent children and their families. She consistently demonstrates excellence in her work, contributing immeasurably to the safety of children in crisis. Ms. Knaebel actively pursues raising additional funds through her church and other community contacts to finance such activities as an annual graduation ceremony for youth who earn high school diplomas and summer camp enrollment for foster children. Well known and highly respected within the community, Ms. Knaebel assumes a mentor and leadership role for her colleagues. Her teens come to appreciate the wondrous support she provides as an advocate and friend, as well as their social worker, to enable them to achieve their goals. She models for the profession and for the young people she serves the admirable characteristics of kindness, empathy, honesty, sincerity, optimism, dedication, enthusiasm, and trust.

Parents Anonymous® Inc. Juanita Chavez Award

Parents Anonymous® Inc. is proud to present the 2005 Juanita Chavez Award to Carolyn Abdullah, Program Director from Parents Anonymous® of the Metropolitan District of Columbia. The Juanita Chavez Award recognizes a Parents Anonymous® staff member or volunteer for his or her work in partnering with parents to create and support meaningful parent leadership to ensure better outcomes for children and families.

CAROLYN ABDULLAH, Program Director Parents Anonymous® of the Metropolitan District of Columbia

The creative and innovative Carolyn Abdullah works tirelessly to promote, develop, and implement Parents Anonymous® Groups and Children's Programs in Washington, D.C. and Northern Virginia based on the strategies of Shared Leadership. She consistently goes that extra mile to provide extensive support to parents who wish to expand their leadership skills. Her ongoing display of Shared Leadership enables numerous parents to achieve significant long-term positive changes individually and within their families, as well as to further their leadership roles and abilities. Ms. Abdullah collaborates with the National Civic League to manage the provision of training and technical assistance services to the Safe Kids/Safe Streets Program, a Federal demonstration program within the Department of Justice's Office of Juvenile Delinquency and Prevention Programs.

Parents Anonymous® Inc. Jolly K. Award

Parents Anonymous® is proud to present the 2005 Jolly K. Award to Tanya Long from Parents Anonymous® of Central and Southern Ohio. The Jolly K. Award recognizes a Parents Anonymous® Parent Leader who exemplifies the courage, tenacity, and strong leadership first demonstrated by Jolly K., the founding parent of Parents Anonymous® Inc. In addition to recognizing the outstanding contributions of an individual, the intent of the award is to promote the importance of granting parents opportunities to assume leadership roles in programs and organizations that provide services to the broad community.

TANYA LONG, Parent Leader Parents Anonymous® of Central and Southern Ohio

Tanya Long first became involved with Parents Anonymous® in a family shelter in Columbus, Ohio, in 1999. In time, she became the Parent Group Leader, and, subsequently, helped to establish a Parents Anonymous® group in a Columbus Head Start program. An active volunteer at the community shelter board for her home city, Ms. Long helps to rank priority shelter facilities and to compile a pamphlet of rights and responsibilities of homeless persons. Achieving great success in strengthening her own family, she often bravely shares her personal story via the media as a way to encourage others. Ms. Long, who earned her General Educational Development (GED) diploma last month and plans to start college in the fall, provides a role model for her four children regarding the importance of continuing one's education despite life's obstacles. In her capacity as a member of the Parents Anonymous® Inc. Child Maltreatment Prevention Work Group, she has testified at a Congressional Briefing on child abuse and neglect, sharing how parents can succeed at lasting changes and strengthen their families through Parents Anonymous®.

Child Maltreatment and Character Development in Boys and Girls

Dr. Eli Newberger

Dr. Eli Newberger, a teacher at Harvard Medical School and founder of the Child Protection Team and Family Development Program at Children's Hospital in Boston, summarizes the biological and psychological factors driving behavioral choices in boys and girls. He demonstrates that the gender nature of violence reflects patterns of brain response and behavioral tendencies scripted over generations of adaptation and that maltreatment alters responses and distorts tendencies. Assuring that cognitive capacities and social requirements enable humans to make choices, Dr. Newberger asserts that character manifests itself at the moral nexus where impulses and desires must be reconciled with the needs and rights of others. He uses interview content to illustrate his analysis and concludes with recommendations for ways to strengthen children's character in the face of maltreatment.

6th Annual Boston Provider Exposition and Family Resource Day

*The Reggie Lewis Track and Athletic Center
1350 Tremont Street, Roxbury, MA 02120*

The Boston Provider Exposition and Family Resource Day creates an opportunity for service providers to educate child protective workers, family members, and the community-at-large about services available to families. This event is unique, given its primary focus on offering to families, especially those who are Department-involved, every opportunity to become knowledgeable about available services. Communities for People Inc., the Massachusetts Department of Social Services, the African American Association of Greater Boston, the Roxbury Community College, and the Reggie Lewis Track and Athletic Center jointly sponsor this information day.

At the most recent event, 80 different organizations participated. In addition to table displays and informative breakout sessions throughout the day, the Provider Exposition and Family Resource Day gives youth the chance to talk about their experiences in state custody, parents the time to discuss the importance of family-centered practice, and teens the chance to link to work opportunities. Food, children's activities, and raffle prizes add to the day's festive nature.

Best Practices in Permanency Planning in Public Child Welfare: An Example from Oklahoma

A study was conducted to examine the decision-making processes of Oklahoma child welfare caseworkers and judges at the critical decision point of the 12-month permanency hearing. After analyzing county-level data, a best practice county and a comparison county were selected on the basis of performance on two Federal outcome measures: time to reunification and re-entry into foster care. This session presents key findings with regard to “successful” permanency planning, that is, planning which resulted in stable family reunification.

Achieving Permanency for Children in Families with Alcohol and Other Drug Problems

The session presents findings from a study conducted in Pottawatomie County, Oklahoma, to examine the permanency outcomes of families with children in foster care who are receiving alcohol and other drug treatment as part of their child welfare services. Concurrently, these families receive community-based case management services via a service delivery network known as Safe Haven. The study utilizes event history analysis, also known as survival analysis, with covariates to test the relationship between participation in Safe Haven and reunification likelihood.

Child Abuse Internet Education Initiative

Currently, many abused children may be overlooked due to a provider's inability to recognize signs of abuse or discomfort with broaching the issue and filing a report. This visual and experiential session presents a comprehensive bilingual (English and Spanish) website that can be used by providers, families, and children of different developmental levels to gain appropriate practical information about child abuse and neglect, as well as step-by-step guidance on what to do if faced with a situation of possible maltreatment. A Multidisciplinary Approach to Responding to Child Abuse and Domestic Violence

A truly integrated, systemic response to the issue of child abuse and domestic violence includes mechanisms for acknowledging and supporting all victims of violence within a family. For child abuse professionals, this means looking beyond the child as the only victim. The task for domestic violence professionals is to incorporate the child's experience into knowledge and practice. Presenters describe the benefits and challenges of incorporating domestic violence consultation into a Children's Advocacy Center, citing the work of Suffolk County.

Child Sexual Abuse and the Internet: What Practitioners Need to Know

Internet-related sex offenses to children and adolescents have received considerable policy and media attention but little systematic study. Presenters report findings from two related research projects focusing on how the Internet is used to facilitate child sexual abuse or the mental health issues that arise from Internet-related sexual abuse. An overview of Internet-related crimes addresses online meeting crimes specifically. The discussion of problematic Internet experiences reported in a clinical population of youth emphasizes sexual-related experiences and includes descriptions and the continuum of each type of experience together with characteristics of the youth and the role each played in his or her experience.

Child Maltreatment as a Predictor of Outcomes Among Young Alumni of Foster Care

The Northwest Foster Care Alumni Study provides information about maltreatment as a predictor of mental health outcomes among young alumni of foster care. To examine the intermediate and long-term effects of family foster care on adult outcomes, the study focused on 479 young adults who were maltreated as children and, subsequently, were served by foster care agencies in Washington and Oregon from 1988 to 1998. On the basis of the interview data, presenters report that foster care alumni experience disproportionately high levels of mental health diagnoses. Results of the weighted multivariate analysis identify which characteristics of maltreatment predict mental health disorders.

Prevention of Child Maltreatment: Efforts and Strategies to Bring Parenting Programs to Scale

This workshop presents projects that address two critical questions in regard to the broad dissemination of parent training programs: whether empirically-based parent-training programs, when broadly implemented by community-based practitioners, can have an impact on the recurrence and incidence of child maltreatment; and the impact of parental engagement and retention on child outcomes and incidents of child maltreatment. Presenters discuss strategies for determining the effectiveness of large-scale evaluations and the issues of parental attendance and engagement that must be addressed to achieve successful dissemination of parent training programs.

Empowering Families in Child Protection Cases: The 'Ohana Family Group Decision-Making Program Model

Family Group Decision-Making (FGDM) focuses on balancing the safety of children with the integrity of the family and building partnerships among the family, the court, the social service agency, service providers, and community resources. The presenter reviews findings from a comprehensive evaluation of the 'Ohana Conferencing Program in Hawaii, which serves as a national FGDM program model; discusses implementation, funding, and procedures and protocol features of the 'Ohana Conferencing Model; demonstrates how the program successfully incorporates culturally competent practices; and addresses how the 'Ohana evaluation findings can provide important information for establishing or improving and sustaining FGDM programs.

Evaluating Child Safety in Out-of-Home Kin and Foster Placements

Child welfare representatives from Missouri and Rhode Island, together with a national consultant, provide an overview of their respective experiences in complying with the Adoption and Safe Families Act (ASFA) requirement to assure safety in out-of-home kin and foster placements. Missouri has field tested a specific assessment process in four districts. Rhode Island is ensuring its Program Improvement Plan (PIP) connects the ASFA requirement of safety in out-of-home care to its high maltreatment rate in foster care. The workshop emphasizes the practical challenges of meeting this ASFA requirement and suggests approaches to achieve successful compliance.

A multi-year, multi-site evaluation was designed to examine the efficacy of Children’s Advocacy Centers (CACs) for improving investigations and reducing harmful effects on children and families. More than 275 in-depth structured interviews with families were conducted in CAC and non-CAC communities. Presenters report the perceptions of children and caregivers in relation to child and caregiver demographics and case characteristics, such as the type and severity of child maltreatment investigated. Family perceptions and experiences regarding the investigation process fall into several distinct categories. Presenters examine these to provide practical feedback that can be incorporated by service providers.

Partnership-Based Collaborative Practice in Child Welfare: Alternative Response, Domestic Violence, and Signs of Safety Child Protection Framework

Program description and outcome data are provided for a six-year period in which 3,000 families accepted Family Partners, an alternative response to reports of child maltreatment. Focus of this public-private partnership between county child and family services and a nonprofit family service agency is on improving the safety and well-being of at-risk children and their families. A Domestic Violence Intervention Team offers services to families experiencing co-occurring spouse and child abuse. Presenters consider safety and well-being outcomes; compare traditional and alternative child protection approaches; and discuss program impact on recidivism, a signs of safety framework, family group decision-making, statewide replication, and solution-focused intervention.

Using a Family Nurturing Program to Prevent Abuse

This workshop reviews the design and implementation of a parent nurturing program created for parents or potential parents in a variety of local settings, including inmates in the county jail, residents at a substance abuse facility, and families at the children's hospital. Since implementation in March 2000, 550 parents have attended five to ten weeks of an educational activity promoting empathy, nurturing, and communication skills with children. Improvements in knowledge were noted among all populations, with some emerging gender and setting differences. Presenters identify several advantages and barriers to providing parenting classes in various settings.

Developing and Sustaining Child Abuse Prevention Programs in Tough Times

A unique "toolkit" of research, strategies, and resources is available on the Internet to assist in building the capacity of community-based organizations. This online toolkit provides effective strategies for collaborating with local communities, using cost-benefit research to highlight the importance of prevention, applying proven social marketing techniques to child abuse prevention, evaluating prevention programs, and identifying creative and collaborative funding strategies. An executive director from a local Child Abuse and Neglect Council discusses how she has used these and other strategies to enable her program to grow from a budget of $38,000 to $900,000 in only five years.

More Than Just Home Visits: Broadening Understanding of What Constitutes a Home Visiting Intervention

Data from an evaluation of a statewide application of the Health Families Evaluation home visiting model are used to identify the full nature of home visitor involvement with participating families. In addition to including the basic utilization data commonly reported in home visiting program evaluations, such as number of visits and duration in program, presenters describe the many other and so-called secondary activities in which home visitors engage, illuminating the meaning these activities hold for program participants.

Not Just Privatization: Florida's Child Welfare System and Community-Based Care

Findings from year three of a multi-method evaluation of Florida's Community-Based Care (CBC) Initiative across 27 counties illuminate some of the persistent administrative and systems issues involved in creating a community-based system of care for children and families dealing with abuse and neglect issues. Presenters review findings regarding programmatic outcomes pertaining to child safety, permanency, and well-being, as well as compare organizational models and expenditure data. Emphasis is on the unique nature of CBC implementation in Florida, including a focus on community ownership, creativity and flexibility at the local level, and lessons learned.

19

Presenters discuss national data from Child Maltreatment 2003. These data were collected through the National Child Abuse and Neglect Data System (NCANDS), based on case-level data from 43 States and aggregate data from 8 States. The workshop addresses such child abuse and neglect topics as reports; investigations; age, sex, race, and ethnicity of child victims; fatalities; perpetrators; and services. Attention also is directed to using data at national, state, and county levels to assess agency performance, as well as how the data on the Child and Family Services Reviews (CFSR) Safety Profile can be used by administrators to improve practice.

The Role of Humor in Coping: Where There Is Laughter, There Is Hope

20

Combining serious discussion and fun with an emphasis on skill building, the presenter establishes humor and accompanying laughter as a valid and at times necessary coping tool for social service and health care providers. This session promotes an understanding of the potential of humor and laughter for a positive physical and emotional influence; demonstrates how humor can be an appropriate way to deal with another person or oneself; suggests methods to develop a comic vision and improve one's sense of humor; illustrates the relationship of humor and laughter to stress reduction; contrasts positive and negative humor; and distinguishes between the use of humor to cope and humor that hurts or hides.

Addressing Safety Concerns in Case Plans

Presenters from Alabama, Wisconsin, and Hamilton County, Ohio, together with a national consultant, review their experiences in complying with the Adoption and Safe Families Act (ACFA) requirement for integrating safety concerns and causes for placement into Child Protective Service (CPS) treatment-oriented case plans. This requirement extends beyond the management of threats to child safety apparent in safety plans by calling for a conceptual approach to case planning and treatment-related intervention that addresses change but has not existed previously. The session emphasizes practical challenges.

Supporting Families Makes a Difference: A Partnership for Prevention and Well-Being

This workshop discusses the history and development of the Front Page Project, a national initiative created by the American Humane Association to help community residents become more involved in efforts to promote the safety and well-being of children. A factor leading to greater project success has been the development, in collaboration with Devereux Kids, Inc. of St. Petersburg, Florida, of a community partnership model that includes sustainers, connectors, and supporters. Presenters focus on the importance of this sustainability model together with the unique and engaging attributes of the project at the community level.

Protecting Children by Supporting Informal Kinship Caregivers

Two studies were conducted with informal kinship caregivers to determine the individual and social protective factors that affect children in informal kinship care, as well as to examine spirituality as a coping mechanism for dealing with stress. Presenters report study results and address implications for supporting and strengthening these families and protecting their children. Data collected in the first study demonstrate that the behavioral functioning of the child and the functioning of the family relate to caregiver stress. Interviews conducted with a sub-sample of 29 African-American female informal kinship caregivers in the second study provide information about how these caregivers define spirituality, the role spirituality plays in their lives, and ways that spirituality serves as a coping mechanism.

The Fourth National Incidence Study of Child Abuse and Neglect (NIS-4): Design and Status

This roundtable summarizes the design of the Fourth National Incidence Study of Child Abuse and Neglect, including all its enhanced features and any associated supplemental tasks, and reports on the status of the ongoing project work. The presenter details the sample design, including the overall scope of the study: all Child Protective Service agencies with jurisdiction in a nationally representative sample of about 120 counties and sentinels who are professionals working in approximately 1,600 non-CPS agencies in these counties. The roundtable also introduces the study website, presents the data collection instruments and procedures, and identifies completion dates for key technical and findings reports.

State Perspectives on Refugee, Trafficked, and Undocumented Children in the Child Welfare System

This roundtable provides an opportunity for state administrators to discuss their experiences and perspectives on serving refugee, trafficked, and undocumented children and youth in their child welfare systems. The session will be of benefit to administrators from those states with higher numbers of these children, as well as officials from states which experience less of an impact but who want to learn more about these children and how to identify them. Strategies for Assessing and Measuring Program Fidelity

Fidelity, defined as the degree to which replicating intervention is delivered with adherence to the originally developed protocol or program (Mowbray, Holter, Teague, & Bybee, 2003), proves vital to successful replication. A brief orientation to the significance of fidelity introduces the workshop and addresses the importance of developing validated training criteria for staff and project participants. Subsequent discussion details the process of criteria selection and related assessment and measurement options. Two examples illustrate these methods: the replication of Family Connections, a neglect prevention intervention with intergenerational families; and the statewide systematic replication/effectiveness trial of the eco-behavioral Project SafeCare Model in Oklahoma.

What Is Healthy Marriage? Defining the Concept

The question what is healthy marriage is addressed by examining the concept of healthy marriage and the elements that, taken together, help to define it, such as commitment, marital satisfaction, and communication. This workshop also considers violence and infidelity, two elements that pose obvious threats to healthy marriage. Presenters identify factors that are antecedents and consequences of healthy marriages and distinguish these from the definition of a healthy marriage. The result is a conceptual model that can be useful in informing public discussion on healthy marriage and what it entails.

Factors That Impact Adoption Outcomes for Abused Children: Research Study Findings

This workshop focuses on a Federally-funded study of adoption outcomes that spans 28 years, linking and investigating the rich histories of more than 600 children who were placed for adoption by Beech Brook — a multi-service child welfare agency in Cleveland, Ohio. Presenters discuss how this study contributes to practice enhancements by examining the interplay among child, caregiver, and system dynamics; informs policy regarding the evolution and needs of adopted children and families; improves science by applying advanced methodologies to model behavioral change across developmental trajectories; and contributes to the continued expansion of knowledge about adoptive families over the life course.

Improving Family-Strengthening Policies and Practices in Child Welfare and Other Human Services Agencies

Public child welfare agencies cannot achieve desirable outcomes for children and families alone. Collective and coordinated efforts on the part of diverse providers are required to achieve and maintain the outcomes of safety, permanence, and well-being. This workshop describes a process that has been used by child welfare agencies, as well as their partner provider agencies, to self-assess their family-strengthening policies and practices. The self-assessment is conducted at five different levels of the organization: governance, management, policy and programs, frontline practice, and monitoring/evaluation.

Poly-Victims: A Concept for Targeting and Helping High Risk Children and Youth

Workshop participants have an opportunity to learn about the Juvenile Victimization Questionnaire (JVQ), which assesses the over 2,000 children and youth aged 2 to 17 from the national Developmental Victimization Survey for 34 distinct forms of child maltreatment and victimization. The session defines poly-victimization; reviews current research regarding the background and characteristics of poly-victims; considers how the concept of poly-victimization alters previous conceptions of child victimization trauma; discusses the best ways to assess for poly-victimization; and identifies the implications of poly-victimization for investigation, treatment and intervention, as well as for prevention.

The Parenting Institute of North Carolina has been developing a statewide capacity to provide quality parent education since 2001. Presenters discuss the strategies North Carolina implemented to develop its statewide capacity to provide quality parent education, showcase the tools used, and outline suggestions to enable others to establish a statewide effort. Key tools include: a website to link parent educators; an annual State Conference to train parent educators; credentialing to improve the quality of teachers; local training sessions in marketing, best practices, and business plans; and evaluation of linkages, quality of teachers, and outcomes for parents.

The Effectiveness of Groups in Helping Children Heal from Trauma

Workshop presenters measured the effects of a group process for children ages 3 to 12 years designed to decrease the number of trauma reactions through the use of directed art, play, movement, and the teaching of calming techniques/self-soothing strategies. Their session addresses common trauma reactions, group process, structure, measurements and results, and provides guidance for developing programs to help children after exposure to trauma. Case examples and drawings from children who participated support the information presented. The workshop includes interactive activities and concrete examples of helpful ways to respond to children who are exhibiting trauma reactions.

This workshop presents a review of school-based child abuse prevention concepts and rationale, touching on current research on child abuse prevention in the schools, the impact of maltreatment on learning, and priorities in school-based prevention programming and collaborative organizations. Presenters report data from five years of program implementation in New Haven and provide information on current models, policies, and practices. Findings from the Consortium of Longitudinal Studies of Child Abuse and Neglect (LONGSCAN): Implications for Policy and Practice

To facilitate the process of translating research into policy and practice, the Consortium of Longitudinal Studies of Child Abuse and Neglect (LONGSCAN) has developed a set of summary briefs that discuss the policy and practice implications of study findings. In this workshop, the LONGSCAN principal investigators present these briefs and make policy and practice recommendations in regard to risk and protective factors; consequences in the context of relative importance of neglect, physical abuse, and observing domestic violence; the role fathers play; and foster care. Foster care has clear influences on access to services and implications for exposure to domestic violence and subsequent abuse.

Maximizing Financial Resources to Serve Families in the Child Welfare System

Child welfare spending data collected through four rounds of a national survey provide the basis for case studies of the efforts of a select few states to maximize resources for financing child welfare services. The intent is to make available a more thorough examination of child welfare spending. Many factors affect a state's child welfare spending, including state-specific initiatives, access to Federal funds, caseload size and composition, and high-profile cases of child deaths due to abuse or neglect. By combining these and other factors with the four rounds of survey data, presenters illustrate the changes in spending priorities and financing methods. The examples serve to aid administrators and policymakers in their budgeting process.

Organizational and Personal Factors Predicting Staff Retention and Turnover in Child Welfare: A Statewide Study

Most important and useful to child welfare educators, policymakers, and practitioners is to understand the factors that contribute to employee retention. This workshop reports on the results of a statewide study conducted in Georgia in 2003 of personal and organizational factors predicting employee turnover and retention in child welfare. A comprehensive 198-item survey was conducted of all 2,500 child welfare employees, as well as 60 two-to-four hour focus group interviews with 385 employees. The results showed clearly that professional commitment, an element of the human caring measure, was the strongest predictor of employee intention to remain employed in child welfare.

“Where Were You When I Was Eight Years Old?”
The Child Assault Prevention (CAP) Project: A Comprehensive,
Community-Based Approach to Abuse Prevention

Highlighting the successful community-based abuse prevention program known as the Child Assault Prevention (CAP) Project, this workshop examines the history of the project, its fundamental philosophy of empowerment, the curriculum, and the steps necessary for implementation at a community, state, or country level. The CAP Project uses a three-pronged approach to address the issue of child abuse prevention: workshops for teachers and school staff, for parents, and for children. Participants also have an opportunity to learn about specific CAP models in several states, the process of establishing a community project, and the training of staff and volunteers.

Skills Seminar A

Reflective Supervision and Strengths-Based Tools: A Powerful Combination for Staff and Supervisors

Reflective supervision, based on building a partnership between supervisor and staff, serves to strengthen staff skill building, facilitate quality assurance, and improve service delivery. This skills seminar addresses the definition and implementation of reflective supervision and provides an opportunity for participants to practice their strengths-based skills in critiquing film clips of supervisory situations. The presenter also introduces concrete, strengths-based tools used in individual staff supervision sessions together with a strengths-based approach to constructive feedback that is accompanied by handouts and reinforced through practicing in triads.

Transforming Child Welfare Daily Practice: Synthesis of Community-Based Family-Centered Approaches and Structured Decision Making

This seminar demonstrates that community-based family centered approaches and Structured Decision Making™ (SDM) are compatible and, when implemented in concert, achieve a synergy that increases the value of both. Participants gain an opportunity to learn strengths-based strategies and approaches that address those issues outlined in Program Improvement Plans, ways to integrate SDM and family-centered practice in community settings, and the "hands on" experience of synthesizing these two seemingly polar strategies into effective practices and partnerships with families.

Parent Child Interaction Therapy: Training for Professionals Who Work with High-Risk Families

Presenters introduce the seminar with an overview of an interpersonal/behavioral theoretical perspective on child physical abuse and then describe the ways in which Parent-Child Interaction Therapy (PCIT) is appropriate for high-risk and physically abusive families. In both the Relationship Enhancement and Discipline components of the PCIT program, parents are taught specific skills, given the opportunity to practice these skills during therapy, and then continue practicing skills until mastery is acquired and the child's behavior has improved. Clinical research finds PCIT to be effective in increasing parenting skills, decreasing child behavior problems, and enhancing parent-child relationships. Participants have an opportunity to practice basic PCIT skills in role-play format.

Let's Play! Strengthening Families through Play

When children are removed from the home, parents have limited opportunities to mend relationships weakened by abuse and neglect. Court ordered visits typically are the only time for parents and children to share a meal, tell stories, and play together. As play is how children experience, interpret, and make sense of the world, case workers and therapist need skills and tools to help parents engage in constructive play during their limited visitation time. Video, small group work, and hands-on play activities are used to facilitate understanding of the role of play in child development and how to select play activities that best suit each child's learning style. The session also focuses on discovering the therapeutic power of play and learning how to assess and interpret family dynamics while families are engaged in play.

Protecting Children with Special Needs: Working with Other Professionals to Create Responsive Services

Children with disabilities, especially developmental disabilities, are particularly vulnerable to abuse and violence. This roundtable discussion presents a variety of resources and information to address the ways that disability and victim assistance professionals can collaborate to end violence against children with disabilities. Following a general review of the scope and extent of violence and abuse against children with disabilities, discussion focuses on the value and potential positive outcomes for ongoing collaboration between victim assistance and disability professionals, services and supports for collaboration, and how the existing disability services infrastructure may be utilized to help protect children with disabilities.

Sexual Abuse Findings in the Absence of Disclosure

This session reports the results of colposcopic exams of over 200 children who had no disclosure and no known history of sexual abuse. Presenters also discuss the impact of these exam results on the decisions made by Child Protective Services and the court system regarding further investigation, interviews, and future disclosures. Study findings emphasize the importance of comprehensive medical exams, including the genital area, for children identified as having other risk factors such as physical abuse and neglect. The model for this program may prove helpful to participants interested in creating a similar program in their area.

Collaborative Nurse Home Visiting Model Uses Technology to Strengthen Families

Presenters describe the Nurses for Newborns Foundation (NFNF) collaborative home visiting model and its successful outcomes for families and children. Multiple maternal and child issues are included within the program protocols, but the overall agency goal is to prevent child abuse and neglect. Outcomes are measured via a custom-designed computerized database created specifically for NFNF to collect and enter client data when in the field. Specially trained registered nurses enter all activities on laptop computers during the home visit and later transfer this data to a central server via the Internet over a dialup connection. Positive outcomes for children in fiscal year 2003 include: 99 percent of infants without a substantiated report of abuse and neglect.

The Role of Fathers in Physical Child Maltreatment Risk: Identifying Prevention Pathways from a National Study

This workshop presents two interrelated papers on the role of fathers in physical child abuse and neglect, releasing original findings from the National Institute of Health funded Fragile Families and Child Wellbeing (FFCW) study. The first paper overviews the role of fathers in maltreatment risk, identifying empirically supported “father pathways” that predict later physical abuse and neglect risk. The second paper places special focus on the role of the relationships of fathers with mothers and community factors that predict physical child abuse and neglect. Presenters discuss the need to more carefully consider assessment and intervention strategies that incorporate empirically grounded information on the role of fathers in physical child abuse and neglect risk and its prevention.

The critical role of social workers in child protective cases is addressed together with the use of social work assessment as the tool to guide that role. Presenters discuss the Children’s Hospital Boston Emergency Department medical social work assessment model and explain the way it is utilized. Several diverse case prototype examples demonstrate the efficacy of this social work assessment tool in a multidisciplinary setting and its evolving process. Emphasis is on the role of social work in fostering interagency and cross systems collaboration.

Recruiting and Retaining Child Welfare Staff: Strategies That Work

51

An overview presents several national strategies currently underway to address recruitment and retention concerns. The session highlights the outcomes from university/agency education and training partnerships to develop and sustain a competent workforce, reports on a new national survey by the American Public Human Services Association that identifies strategies to address recruitment and retention concerns, and considers areas for further research and policy development. Presenters also discuss the critical role that national organization collaborations play in bringing attention to the workforce crisis, supporting sustainable strategies, disseminating findings about what works, influencing policymakers, and providing information and technical assistance.

Beyond Risk Assessment: Enhancing Risk Reduction and Safety through the Cross Jurisdictional Risk Review Team

Northern Virginia jurisdictions of Alexandria, Arlington, and Fairfax County have taken an effective step toward enhancing the outcomes and utility of the risk and safety assessment protocols utilized by their child welfare systems. The creation of a cross-jurisdictional risk review team provides periodic reviews of the highest risk cases in each jurisdiction by child welfare specialists. This session presents the policy and procedure developed by the three jurisdictions to shape the current team, identifies the steps necessary to bring about this innovative approach to managing high risk cases, specifies tools that are used to standardize the process and provide documented feedback and planning, and addresses the impact of the process on each jurisdiction two years after its inception.

Family Dependency Treatment Courts: A Collaborative Model Using the Power of the Court to Engage and Retain Parents in Treatment to Reunify Families

Workshop presenters explain the concept of Family Dependency Treatment Courts (FDTC) and the use of the power of the court to engage and retain parents in substance abuse treatment. The session demonstrates the benefits of FDTC collaboration in child welfare cases where substance abuse is a precipitating factor, the myriad of possible partners in this endeavor, and the flexibility of this model to accommodate many types of communities. Expansion of the “Family Connections” Research Base with a Parental Self-Nurturing Component

56

DePelchin Children’s Center (DCC) was funded by the Administration on Children, Youth and Families as one of eight sites to replicate “Family Connections,” an evidence-based program designed to prevent child neglect. With its funding, DCC is examining the effectiveness of the program model’s core services in a different context, as well as testing the addition of a unique component to programming called “Just for Me” time. The “Just for Me” time teaches self-nurturing skills to help parents meet their needs for such supports as respite and social companionship. A Promising Partnership: Court/Agency Collaboration in Achieving Outcomes

57

Involving the courts and legal community is necessary to achieve improvements in outcomes for children. Further, developing these relationships and successful agency/court collaboration can prove a cost-efficient way for agencies to see results. The workshop reviews the implementation of new Federal legislation: Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act, Keeping Children and Families Safe Act, and the Adoption and Safe Families Act, in particular Child and Family Services Reviews. After identifying court-related concerns, focus is on system reform efforts. Participants have an opportunity to learn about the Court Improvement Projects. Child Maltreatment Intervention: Alternative Response and Traditional Response Working in Tandem

60

Workshop presenters address the process used to launch a child protection Alternative Response program in a large urban, suburban, and rural Minnesota county, including how Alternative Response and Traditional Response work in tandem to provide an effective response to children experiencing child abuse and neglect. Using the Dakota County Alternative Response Initiative as a case study, the session identifies strategies to enhance family engagement, decision-making stability, and strength-based interventions. A discussion of social work process focuses on service responsiveness, intensity and duration, and shared decision-making and problem solving. Strengthening Community Linkages and Responsiveness for At-Risk Families with Peer Review

61

This session describes how the Illinois Department of Children and Family Services designed and implemented a peer review process to strengthen linkages and collaboration with community-based family support programs. The intent of this peer review process is to ensure that low and moderate risk families who come to the attention of Child Protective Services are referred to responsive family-centered services to address issues and conditions threatening the safety and well-being of children and families. Presenters address the development of the peer review assessment tool and process and how the findings from the first phase of the peer review are being used to improve the way families connect to effective services at Department and local levels.

Understanding Child Abuse and Neglect and Foster Care from a Poverty Perspective

The workshop addresses recent findings on child welfare service patterns by considering the role of poverty as a key factor in the provision of child protective and foster care services. Presenters discuss data analyses regarding poverty and placement in foster care based on data from the National Child Abuse and Neglect Data Systems. The first analysis examines poverty rates at county levels and victimization rates. A second analysis compares the age distributions of victims of maltreatment in the poorest counties to the age distributions of victims in the wealthiest counties, as well as considers type of maltreatment and race of victims. The third analysis includes change in foster placement rates in relation to change in poverty.

The Fathering After Violence Project: Abusive Men and Their Children

To improve men's abilities to parent, the Fathering after Violence Project developed curriculum materials based on focus groups with survivors of domestic violence, men who have been violent, and professionals, as well as meetings with a national advisory group. These materials have been piloted in three Boston Batterer Intervention Programs over 2003-2004. Presenters discuss findings relating to the focus groups, curriculum materials, and a formative evaluation of the project, which documents responses of participating men and their partners and group facilitators. The workshop also identifies potential risks and benefits of this effort — the conceptual, organizational, and clinical issues.

64

The presenter defines the types of child maltreatment, describes their possible negative effects on the social and emotional development of children with learning disabilities, and identifies strategies and social-emotional interventions that teachers can implement to achieve safe, predictable, and nurturing classroom environments for maltreated children with learning disabilities. Strategies that teachers can implement include structure through consistent routines, reasonable rules and limits, appropriate styles of discipline, behavioral supports, as well as the use of natural and logical consequences and other behavior management techniques. The teacher emerges as the single most significant social-emotional intervention.

The Ray E. Helfer, M.D. Award

The Ray E. Helfer, M.D. Award is presented to highlight the valuable contributions of a pediatrician in local and national efforts to prevent child abuse. Dr. Helfer, a pediatrician, an educator, and a pioneer in the prevention of child abuse, is considered the “father” of State Children’s Trust and Prevention Funds. Dr. Helfer conceived of the idea that “Children’s Trust Funds” should be created and funded by government to ensure that our nation’s children grow up nurtured, safe, and free from harm. Today, all 50 states and the District of Columbia have passed legislation to establish Children’s Trust Funds to prevent child abuse. Every year, Children’s Trust Funds provide tens of millions of dollars worth of funding, technical assistance, and other support to community-based child abuse prevention programs.

The National Alliance of Children’s Trust and Prevention Funds and the American Academy of Pediatrics are pleased to present the Ray E. Helfer, M.D. Award to Mary Carrasco, M.D., the Director of International and Community Health at Mercy Hospital in Pittsburgh. This distinguished award is given to Dr. Carrasco in recognition of her over two decades of exemplary work to prevent child abuse and neglect through research, program development, advocacy, systems reform, and education. Dr. Carrasco founded the first Family Support Center in her home State of Pennsylvania. She pursued her groundbreaking work in child abuse prevention by building comprehensive programs into six Family Support Centers. Dr. Carrasco has developed successful new programs for parent education and family advocacy, as well as created models for improving health care services for children. A respected national trainer on child abuse prevention for graduate students, school nurses, police, and others, Dr. Carrasco is a Clinical Associate Professor of Pediatrics and an Associate Professor of Community Health at the University of Pittsburgh. In addition, Dr. Carrasco serves as Chair of the Board of Directors for the Pennsylvania Children’s Trust and, since 1984, has raised and managed almost $20,000,000 for community, state, national, and international prevention activities.

Specialized Treatment and Recovery Services (STARS): Effective Strategies to Engage Fathers in Treatment, Recovery, and Parenting

The STARS program, a component of Sacramento County's child welfare system, works with parents with substance use disorders. As fathers represent 30 percent of the STARS participants, this mini-plenary session highlights strategies for engaging men in services, regaining custody, and assuming parenting roles. The program evaluator, program developer, program manager, and a STARS graduate share these successful strategies and offer recommendations to frontline workers and program administrators for replication of this model in other jurisdictions.

Three key strategies provide the basis for the STARS program: motivational interviewing, role modeling, and accountability. STARS workers help fathers understand that they need to recover "for their kids" and that recovery is separate from the child welfare case. This approach facilitates the father assuming responsibility for his recovery and his children. The session also identifies personal obstacles fathers often face to changing their lives and reassuming parental responsibilities, including late-stage addiction, resistance to the "system," lack of hope, and the feeling of dismissal by the Dependency Courts.

10:45 a.m. – 2:30 p.m.

Celebrating its 10th year of service, the Medford Family Network of the Medford Public Schools is a fully-funded and universally accessible parenting education and family support program. The Network strives for a positive impact on the developmental process of children from birth to age six, providing parenting education curricula and workshops, discussion groups, age-specific inclusive playgroups, new parent groups, home visitation, citywide family events, lending libraries, a family resource/drop-in center, information and referral services, family literacy initiatives, English languages classes, support groups, and individual consultation. In addition, the Network offers programs for fathers, grandparents, single parents, parents of children with special needs, and parents who work at home and other caregivers.

Visitors tour the New Center. Various video, parent, and provider presentations offer opportunities to explore the success and ongoing investment that stems from collaboration with a broad range of partners from early care and childhood programs, municipal agencies, businesses, private donors, public and foundation grants, and child protective services. Community leaders share cutting-edge approaches to actualize shared responsibility for protecting children and strengthening families. Lunch will be served.

Suffolk County Family Justice Center/Children's Advocacy Center of Suffolk County

989 Commonwealth Avenue
Boston, MA 02215-1308

11:00 a.m. – 1:30 p.m.

One of the first of its kind in the country, the Suffolk County Family Justice Center is scheduled to open in the spring of 2005. This new initiative intends to co-locate domestic violence, sexual assault, and child abuse services all under one roof, joining with the Children's Advocacy Center of Suffolk County.

In a 33,000 square foot building donated by Boston Mayor Thomas M. Menino, the Family Justice Center plans to offer an array of services, including law enforcement, criminal justice, victim advocacy, civil legal assistance, medical counseling, housing assistance, and more. By co-locating a comprehensive, coordinated, and multidisciplinary network of domestic violence, child abuse, and sexual assault prevention and professional intervention, the Suffolk County Family Justice Center seeks to enhance victim services and increase offender accountability.

POSTER SESSIONS 10:30 A.M. – 5:30 P.M.

Poster Session 5

The Effects of Domestic Violence on Infant Health Factors and Child Abuse Rates

This session presents research findings from a home visiting child abuse prevention program. From January 1997 to January 2001, 2,073 at-risk mothers with first-born children participated in a home visiting child abuse prevention program for at least one year. Over the four-year period, the state's child protection agency confirmed child maltreatment in 23 (14 percent) of the 167 families assessed with domestic violence and 81 (4 percent) of the 1,906 families assessed as having no domestic violence. Domestic violence during pregnancy or the first eight weeks of child rearing was related significantly to confirmation of child abuse during the child's first four years and to several indices of poor infant health during the child's first year.

Using Research to Enhance Understanding of Policies and Practices Promoting Tribal Permanency for Indian Children

A comprehensive research-practice approach to planning and implementing culturally driven permanency for Indian children was implemented in 15 counties in Northern and Southern California. The session describes this approach, outlining emerging issues currently confronting the permanency needs for Indian children. These include reconciling the legislative requirements of the Adoption and Safe Families Act and the Indian Child Welfare Act; conflicting standards for Indian child placement between county and Indian child welfare services; adequacy of fiscal, mental health, medical, social, and cultural support services for tribally-placed children; and the role of research in bridging gaps in the understanding needed to develop iterative steps in the change process leading to effective cultural outcomes for Indian children who require permanency on Indian rancherias and reservations.

FaCES: An Innovative Program to Provide Health Evaluation Services to Recently Placed Foster Children

The Foster Children Evaluation Services (FaCES) Clinic opened at UMass Memorial Health Care in the fall of 2003 in response to the alarming statistics that only 11 percent of foster children statewide were receiving the mandated 7-day health screens or the 30-day comprehensive medical evaluation. This poster session summarizes the timelines from the initial idea to the opening of FaCES; the experience thus far in terms of children seen, new medical/psychiatric developmental problems identified, and rate of abnormal laboratory findings; and the evaluation to date. The latter covers compliance with 7- and 30-day medical examination and 6-month dental screening guidelines, as well as success in obtaining all pertinent past medical records.

Treating Child Victims of Cumulative Trauma: An Innovative Model

Severely traumatized children need more innovative and intensive treatment programs such as the model of intervention described in this session. A multi-systemic wraparound model of treatment proved effective with Iraqi refugee child victims of cumulative traumas. Summer day treatment and a year-round after school program with an outreach component were provided to a target population of emotionally or behaviorally disturbed Iraqi refugee children, ages 6 to 15, in Dearborn and Detroit, Michigan. Pre-post testing of the first six months for the 30 children enrolled in the program indicate significant improvement in the measures used, especially school performance.

Working with Intergenerational Families to Increase Safety, Well-Being, and Permanency

Presenters draw from practice experience and build on the growing literature regarding intergenerational families to describe the risk and protective factors associated with child neglect, to review philosophical principles of working with intergenerational families, and to consider promising practices and intervention strategies for increasing safety, well-being, and permanency in families headed by grandparents or other intergenerational caregivers. The session includes the perspectives of former clients of the University of Maryland's Grandparent Family Connections, a strengths- and community-based program that effectively responds to the needs of vulnerable intergenerational families at risk for child neglect.

Experiences with Referring Child Welfare Involved Families with Young Children to Early Intervention Services

Participants have an opportunity to learn about the challenges, strategies, and rewards of implementing the newly required referrals from Child Welfare Services (CWS) to Part C of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), also known as Early Intervention (EI). Based on over two years of experience at three pilot sites, presenters from the Massachusetts Early Child Linkage Initiative discuss the following: logistics of the pilot site referral system; number of families who were offered the referral by CWS workers; factors influencing the offer of referrals; rate of acceptance of the referral offer; child eligibility rate and criteria for EI services; challenges to implementing these referrals and for building a collaboration; and strategies used to overcome these challenges.

Child and System Outcomes from Multidisciplinary Assessments of Substantiated Serious Child Protective Service Cases Involving Young Children

This workshop describes the results of four years of working with a Child Protective Services (CPS) intervention model that represents a paradigm shift. Providing a comprehensive, multidisciplinary assessment at the point of first CPS substantiation, this model allows accurate assessment of the child and family's needs, an understanding of underlying problems leading to the child maltreatment, the use of interventions appropriate to the specific family's needs, and less risk for children. Findings from families who receive the intervention are compared to a matched group of families who had no intervention.

Families as Partners: Shifting Paradigms in Child Welfare

71

In response to the challenge of providing child protection, the Massachusetts Department of Social Services (DSS) initiated two programs designed to be family centered and child focused in scope: Family-Based Services and Family Group Conferencing. Using empirical research as a framework, presenters review the history of these programs together with their use in DSS and their efficacy. The research shows that families who engaged in Family-Based Services and/or the Family Group Conferencing experience better case outcomes than families who receive neither service. Families involved with these services have fewer substantiated reports of abuse and/or neglect, and children in these families spend less time in out-of-home placement.

Addressing Child Neglect: Challenges, Strategies, and Lessons Learned

72

The National Clearinghouse on Child Abuse and Neglect Information has developed a synthesis of findings from ten demonstration projects on child neglect. This workshop presents a brief overview of these recently completed five-year demonstration projects, their target populations and outcomes, as well as their strategies for prevention, intervention, and treatment of child neglect. These ten neglect projects provided a variety of services to high risk families, including parent education, referrals or links to community resources, home visits, support groups, counseling, and concrete assistance.

Evolution of an Innovative Statewide Pediatric Sexual Assault Nurse Examiner (SANE) Program: Bridging Children's Advocacy Centers and Emergency Departments

73

This session highlights both the challenges and successes of the statewide Pediatric Sexual Assault Nurse Examiner (SANE) Program in Massachusetts and encourages participants to consider ways to replicate this collaboration in their own jurisdiction. The workshop addresses several issues: credentialing requirements for Pediatric SANE candidates, implementing the program statewide, funding procurement, and strategies for integrating the Pediatric SANE role into the multidisciplinary Children's Advocacy Center model and into an emergency department setting. Presenters outline the development of the first and "child friendly" Pediatric Sexual Abuse Evidence Collection kit nationwide, as well as the specifications for establishing a Pediatric SANE, the recruitment process, curriculum development, and training implementation.

Program Start Up: Building the Path Together and Successful First Steps

In October 2000, grants were awarded to each of four organizations through the Children’s Bureau, Administration on Children, Youth and Families, to develop Quality Improvement Centers (QICs). The QICs were funded in part to determine the value and effectiveness of creating decentralized, regional decision-making and administrative structures for child welfare program implementation and evaluation. This workshop provides a brief overview of each QIC, addressing approach to collaboration, provision of support and technical assistance, and the unique strengths and challenges associated with implementing projects along with the required research component. Whither Substantiation: The Role of Substantiation in Future Child Protective Service Policies and Practices

75

The recent focus on child welfare outcomes intensifies the ongoing debate regarding advantages and disadvantages of making a determination of whether maltreatment has occurred or not as part of the Child Protective Service response, raising the issue of whether such a determination should be a gateway to services. Four presenters discuss the research and practice context for this debate and provide core detailed analyses based on experiences in Minnesota and Washington. The session provides information on factors influencing the likelihood that a CPS referral will be substantiated, including a comparison of factors associated with referrals of sexual abuse, physical abuse, and neglect. Presenters also address factors associated with classifying a case as substantiated, inconclusive, or unsubstantiated.

Innovative Management Approaches to Improve Child Welfare Services

Communities for People (CFP), a nonprofit child welfare agency, has developed and implemented privatized management programs to oversee services children and families receive in Massachusetts and Rhode Island. This workshop focuses on three examples in which CFP uses managed care tools to improve services: the Boston Family Reunification Network, a Family-Based Services Utilization Management Program, and the Rhode Island Placement Solutions program. For these examples, presenters discuss program development and implementation and the ways CFP incorporates program data and knowledge to improve practice.

Age and Gender Differences in Suspicion of Child Sexual Abuse

This workshop presents the results of an ongoing research project focusing on age and gender differences in regard to suspicion of sexual abuse. Intake data from the Child Protection Outpatient Clinic at the Boston Children's Hospital for the period 1999-2003 provide the basis for the findings. The study examines whether sexual abuse suspicions are more equally generated for younger boys and girls, since suspicions of sexual abuse are likely to be formed on bases other than direct disclosure with younger populations of children. Study findings serve to inform practitioners by enhancing recognition of gender differences in response to sexual abuse and by facilitating improved recognition of sexual abuse.

Beyond "Crazy Thinking" ... How to Effectively Respond to Abuse Cases Involving Children with Disabilities

79

Children with disabilities represent an important population, a "subset," in the United States, yet problems persist in terms of negative attitudes toward them, a lack of interest in addressing their needs, and a paucity of experts or experienced personnel to effectively and sensitively provide intervention and support. This workshop offers instruction in developing a solid information and skills base for working with children with disabilities and their families as a prerequisite to excellence in service delivery. The discussion includes information on how any community can develop effective intervention strategies.

Responding to Child Abuse and Domestic Violence during Pediatric Hospitalizations: The Need for Multidisciplinary Planning

Presenters describe their unique collaborative pediatric practice within Children’s Hospital Boston, its community health center, as well as its partnerships with a plethora of State and community agencies and individuals to coordinate service provision. The session addresses the importance of screening adolescent patients and parents of pediatric patients for violence in their families/relationships, as well as the questions providers may consider when screening for and assessing risk factors that may exist in a dating/domestic violence relationship. Case specific examples emphasize the complexities of inpatient cases that involve the overlapping diagnoses of child abuse and domestic violence and the beneficial nature of multidisciplinary case practice.

Building Bridges between Child Welfare and Part C Early Intervention

Procedures developed by Child Find and the Child Welfare Intervention Project are described. This project is a U.S. Department of Education funded program that worked with county child welfare and Part C early intervention agencies to increase referrals to Part C (a component of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act) in Colorado. Presenters discuss strategies used in this project to promote collaboration between child welfare and Part C agencies and to increase referrals of young children to Part C. The session concludes with evidence that Part C enrollment on the part of children served by child welfare increased over the life of the project.

Workshop presenters, who have adapted Dialectical Behavior Therapy to address abusive parental behavior to children, describe the history of the FIRST program, key components, and evidence of efficacy. Clients, child protective workers, and clinicians work collaboratively, using several treatment modalities in support of a DBT approach to parenting. The session also introduces participants to DBT's theoretical base and shows its connection to current parental behaviors and parents' responsibility to learn more adaptive and acceptable skills. Presenters discuss how parents learn maladaptive parenting skills in their families of origin, as well as outline a typical course of treatment.

Knowledge Is Power: Enhancing Research and Practice Collaborations to Improve Service Delivery and Outcomes in Child Abuse Prevention

Researchers and program practitioners often are charged to develop effective collaborations that can lead to improved service delivery and, ultimately, to better outcomes for families. Many times, however, no clear pathways exist to facilitate this effort. Using the example of an evaluation of a home visiting program for young parents, this workshop guides participants in defining program outcomes, structuring collaboration with researchers to support investigation of those outcomes, and implementing the information gained from the investigation into the program to influence modifications in service delivery.

Removing the Perverse Incentive: A Public-Private Partnership Serving Families with Unsubstantiated Child Abuse and Neglect Investigations

Representatives of a nonprofit agency, a public state child welfare agency, and a collaborating university describe an unprecedented public-private partnership to test the hypothesis that direct social services after an unsubstantiated maltreatment report can reduce recidivism. Presenters discuss how Connecting Families, a nonprofit agency, tackled this issue in Massachusetts, that is: developed a research-based approach to child maltreatment prevention; raised five million dollars to support the pilot project; worked with the public child welfare agency to encourage investigators to refer families to the voluntary program; collaborated with a local university to implement a randomized control group evaluation design; and set the stage politically to institutionalize this approach statewide should the evaluation prove its effectiveness.

Minnesota's Response

In 2001, the Minnesota legislature charged its Department of Human Services with responsibility for studying the overrepresentation of African American children in out-of-home placement. This workshop addresses the report prepared for the legislature, Study of Outcomes for African American Children in Minnesota's Child Protection System; the five recommendations emerging from the report; and the action Minnesota has taken to implement the recommendations in conjunction with the African American community, local county social service agencies, the University of Minnesota, and other child welfare advocacy organizations. Particular emphasis is on the recommendation to focus on improving county practices, which resulted in a case review study. Informal analysis of the family characteristics of children in the Massachusetts welfare system indicates that caretaker mental illness or substance abuse proves a critical variable in the decision to remove a child from his or her home. This workshop presents two major endeavors in Massachusetts designed to serve families in the child welfare system in the instance of caretaker mental illness: joint forums involving the Department of Mental Health (DMH) and the Department of Social Services (DSS) and a DSS pilot program. Roundtable 4

Understanding and Responding to Racial Disparities in Child Welfare Services

Racial disparities are an issue of great national concern. This roundtable first presents and discusses the current research on racial disparities in child welfare and the social psychology of bias, focusing specific attention on the implication for application in policy and practice. Secondly, presenters from state and county child welfare agencies describe three different models of addressing the problem of racial disparities through policy and practice. These models illustrate how research findings can be applied to policy and practice and also show how various organizations in different contexts can craft solutions that are appropriate for their environment and population.

Clinical Consultation for Child Welfare Supervisors:
A University-Public Agency Collaboration

This session describes a clinical consultation model that was developed and tested with child welfare supervisors in a large urban municipality over a three-year period. The Clinical Consultation for Child Welfare Supervisors program was designed to assist supervisors with their roles as educators, mentors, and coaches for casework staff, specifically in relationship to case practice decisions. Evaluation methodology included a pre-post self-assessment measure, a consumer satisfaction questionnaire, and follow-up at 3- and 15-months post program participation. Fidelity of the intervention was consistent across years two and three with statistically significant changes in self-assessment scores in each year as well. The workshop also presents one of the assessment tools developed for supervisors to use in assessing their casework staff.

Collaboration: Lessons Learned for Positive Outcomes

The University of Texas at Austin School of Social Work, Travis County Juvenile Probation, and the Texas Department of Family and Protective Services (CPS) utilize Title IV-E training funds to develop and sustain a collaborative effort to significantly increase the number of professional social workers employed by the Child Protective Service agency. Presenters discuss the collaboration's history, challenges and rewards, as well as how the programs fit into the service delivery system. The session offers guidelines to participants for implementing similar programs, including ways to identify and remove barriers to working across these disciplines and systems.

An Introduction to Child Death Review Panels and Presentation of Findings from a National Review

95

This workshop provides an introduction to child death review panels and includes the results of recent research that examined over 35 state-level child death review panel reports. The presenter addresses the purpose and focus of review panels; the history of the child death review panel movement; the current status of review panels across the nation in regard to legislation, funding, and the composition of panel members; and how reviews are undertaken and specific areas of panel focus. Final emphasis is on the common findings and recommendations of panels that concentrate on child maltreatment related deaths.

National Evaluation of Child Welfare Training: Findings from a Cross-Site Analysis of Grantees

96

A project team presents data, findings, and conclusions related to the Cross-Site Evaluation of Grantees, one component of the National Evaluation of Child Welfare Training Project. This first presentation of evaluation results describes the relationship between the context in which projects occurred and the training activities and outcomes achieved for each project. Presenters identify consistent themes across projects, as well as unique findings within individual sites. The discussion considers lessons learned from the projects, as well as best practices that might be incorporated into further training efforts.

Finally! Parenting Education for Men Who Abuse or Control Their Partners

Abusive men, compared with men who do not batter, are more likely both to abuse and to neglect their children. This session reviews the rationale and curriculum for parenting education groups geared specifically to men who abuse or control their intimate partners. The presenter profiles the common parenting problems exhibited by abusive men and then describes the 15-session Caring Dads curriculum that is designed to help both custodial and non-custodial fathers become more knowledgeable, caring, and responsible co-parents. Case examples illustrate positive responses to this curriculum. The session also covers how “smaller doses” of parenting education have been integrated into abuser intervention groups.

Responding to Sexual Abuse in Our Church: Supporting Parishes and Faith Communities through Collaboration

Presenters describe a successful collaboration of Archdiocese personnel and lay clinical social workers with expertise in sexual abuse to deliver an educational training with clinical integrity to Catholic leadership teams from various parishes and faith communities. Regional trainings were designed to enhance leadership team knowledge and understanding of child sexual abuse in general and, in particular, priest perpetrated sexual abuse. The trainings also presented current Diocesan policies and procedures for sexual abuse prevention and intervention and prompted leadership teams to create parish models for education, discernment, healing, and prevention. The overall feedback from the regional presentations was very positive, specifically valuing the credibility, integrity, and forthright nature of the presenters and material.

Medicine and the Prevention of Child Abuse and Neglect

As anticipatory guidance is a regular part of pediatric care, the general pediatrician is in a prime position to play an expanded role in the primary and secondary prevention of child abuse and neglect. This workshop presents the methods and findings of Practicing Safety, an innovative research project designed to decrease child abuse and neglect by enhancing anticipatory guidance provided to parents of children ages 0-3. The project set out to create an impact on the way six pediatric practices in New Jersey addressed child abuse and neglect prevention by first studying each practice's structure and processes and then by tailoring interventions accordingly. The session offers ideas of new ways of including anticipatory guidance topics in well child visits.

Enhancing Supervisory Practice in Child Welfare: Partnerships for Professional Development and Positive Outcomes

This session describes the learning laboratory partnership model being used to promote collaboration between the public child welfare agency, universities, and community partners to address the challenges of public welfare. Findings from the social work literature regarding what is known about supervision are contrasted with the experiences of project staff. Project representatives from Arkansas, Mississippi, Missouri, and Tennessee describe their approach to the professional development of frontline supervisors and share what they are learning regarding supervisory practice in public child welfare and their experiences with organizational change.

Making Connections When Using an Alternative Response System

Workshop presenters focus on the research questions and design of a study conducted to address how families connect with services when tracked into an alternative response system and the factors that affect these connections. More specifically, the study examines how the types of community partners and level of involvement of community partners affect the connections of families to services. The session describes the alternative response systems in the two states under study and discusses the logic model for an alternative response system. Presenters report observations from one site.

Project Connect: Producing Positive Outcomes for Children with Severe Emotional Disturbances

Presenters describe Project Connect, a Massachusetts wraparound program that works with children who have been abused and/or neglected and those who suffer from other forms of severe emotional disturbance to help their families find the support and services they need to keep the children in their own homes, schools, and communities. The session addresses tailoring treatment plans for traumatized children, building collaborations between universities and programs in order to conduct state-of-the-art research and evaluation, and fostering parental involvement at all levels of program and research activities. Yearly analyses for the last decade consistently demonstrate improvements in children's level of functioning, decreases in out-of-home placements for children, high levels of parental satisfaction, and increases in a sense of hope on the part of families for the future of their child.

Pennsylvania's Approach: A Strategic Approach to Developing Systems of Care on the Local Level

Pennsylvania, similar to many other states participating in a Federal Child and Family Services Review, was required to develop a Program Improvement Plan to address permanency and well-being outcome indicators related to children's mental health needs, needs and assessments, and family involvement in case planning. This workshop focuses on the connections between successful implementation of Systems of Care principles that result in improved assessments and provision of services for children and their families, as well as promoting better delivery of services on the local level. Presenters also describe how Pennsylvania is building meaningful family involvement at all levels, citing examples of successful implementation.

Child Neglect Fatalities: A Ten Year Analysis

A multidisciplinary collaborative conducted research on child neglect related deaths. This session addresses the four areas of analysis used by the collaborative as a basis for developing policy recommendations: data analysis, best practices research, professional surveys, and community focus groups. The database was reanalyzed for the last ten years to extract longitudinal data. An independent consulting firm identified the best practices effective in reducing child neglect fatalities and injuries. Participants in five focus groups concurred with the 250 professionals surveyed, indicating that parents need education on parenting skills and that the community must be made aware of the problem.

Addressing the Myth: The Relationship of Domestic Violence to Child Protective Service Case Decision-Making and Case Outcomes

This workshop reviews data from several studies examining the presence of domestic violence in Child Protective Service cases and the effect the presence of domestic violence has on CPS decisions regarding substantiation, case opening, and removal of children from their primary caregiver(s). Contrary to popular belief, the data presented indicate the presence of domestic violence in CPS cases and suggest that domestic violence may not be given enough weight in CPS decision-making. The presenter addresses the policy and practice implications of these findings.

Resilience theory and research suggest that protective factors in the lives of maltreated and high risk children, such as positive social support, may offset maladaptive outcomes. This workshop reports on a research project that drew participants from an ongoing prospective longitudinal study investigating developmental outcomes of 172 at-risk urban children. Findings revealed that social support enhanced peer competence at first and sixth grades for children in this high risk sample, although moderation analyses were not significant. The session includes discussion of potential applications of the research.

Strengthening Families: Healthy Marriage Component

Governor Jeb Bush has made strengthening families one of his top three priorities for the promotion of the health and well-being of Florida's families. The Department of Children and Families collaborates with State agencies, businesses, and faith- and community-based as well as nonprofit organizations to accomplish the healthy marriage component goals of this initiative. These include reducing out-of-wedlock births, the divorce rate, and the number of children in out-of-home care. This workshop provides an overview of Florida's progress toward achieving these goals.

Focusing on a unique program model, Services for Substance Abusing Battered Women and Their Children, this workshop explores how services which address concurrently domestic violence, substance abuse, and the mental health needs of mothers prove vital to efforts to partner with these families to support their safety, recovery, and parenting. The session presents the voices of the women and children who have been involved with this service, recounting what has been helpful, what has been difficult, as well as the women's personal goals and challenges. Presenters also discuss the meaning of success and approaches to engaging in continuous learning through ongoing and often challenging collaboration among battered women's programs, substance abuse services, and the staff of the Department of Social Services.

Improving Child Welfare Practice: Results of 52 Child and Family Services Reviews

110

The Administration for Children and Families completed its first round of 52 Child and Family Services Reviews in 2004. This workshop presents an overview of the findings of the 52 Reviews and identifies trends in child welfare practice across the country. Findings are based on a review of approximately 2,500 cases nationally. In addition to focusing on the primary outcomes of safety, permanency, and well-being, the session addresses differences in outcome achievement for children served in their own homes versus out-of-home care and the relationship between outcomes and certain practices. The workshop concludes with information about the ways states address these issues through mandated Program Improvement Plans and the key challenges facing states as they work to implement system change.

Reducing Maltreatment and Disruption in Foster Homes

Two of the most significant problems for child welfare agencies are child disruptions from foster care placements and child maltreatment in foster care. This session discusses the development of the actuarial foster care risk assessment in New Mexico, as well as the creation of the Structured Decision Making™ (SDM) Foster Care Model and its planned development and implementation in Los Angeles and other California counties. The result in New Mexico was a 10-item actuarial tool that classifies foster homes into low, moderate, or high levels of risk for maltreatment and/or disruption. The SDM model uses a series of instruments to help guide social workers in making foster care placement decisions.

Effectiveness and Costs of the New Paradigm: Alternative Response in Minnesota

Begun as a demonstration in 20 counties in 2001, the Minnesota Alternative Response project was built on the work of prior initiatives that sought to find better ways of applying a family-centered and family-friendly approach to resolving issues that bring families to the attention of the child protection system. Based on the results of a comprehensive four-year evaluation, the Alternative Response Model has been implemented statewide. This workshop describes the Alternative Response Model and the implementation of the demonstration, as well as addresses changes in Child Protective Service practice; the effect on staff workload; the response of families; outcomes related to child safety, recidivism, placement, and family well-being; cost analyses results; and the influence of research results and lessons learned.

Strengths, Skills, and Support: A Family Development Approach to Child Protective Services

This skills seminar presents information and teaches skills to help increase the effectiveness and well-being of frontline child welfare workers. Participants have an opportunity to learn several techniques and strategies to assist and support families by incorporating strengths-based family support practices as presented in the Cornell Family Development Training and Credentialing curriculum. These include identifying family strengths, managing work-related stress, clarifying one's personal vision for work, expanding abilities to work respectfully with other cultures, and using family-focused assessment.

Implementing Cultural Competency in Work with Native American Children and Families: From Concept to Practice

Cultural competency is a key requirement for appropriate work with families in which child abuse or neglect has occurred. This skills seminar addresses the gap between conceptual understanding of cultural expectations of Native American families and implementing that understanding in client interaction when child abuse and/or neglect may be a problem within the family. Presenters provide a conceptual framework that encompasses the many cultural issues that have an effect on behavior and interaction in Native American families, including differences in communication styles, special aspects of extended family/clan/tribe relationships, and the impact of levels of acculturation on family interaction. The seminar includes experiential learning exercises, small group discussion, and role play of family vignettes.

Protecting Children through Strengthening Families: Healthy Marriage Initiative with Refugee Families

Roundtable presenters review a qualitative research project designed to determine what refugees were reporting as stressors and strengths to marriages and families, challenges to parenting and mental health, and available and unmet social needs. A purposive sample of 40 families from the Congo, Cuba, Sudan, Ethiopia, Colombia and 15 social service providers were selected in two urban cities in the southwest. Data from the social service provider interviews revealed several themes related to strengthening families and the prevention of abuse and neglect. The study indicates that strengths exist such as faith practices and community unity as manifested through cultural values and beliefs, but that these are underutilized in the development of effective programs and policies for this population.

Protecting Children from Sexual Abuse: Report Back from the National Risk and Protective Factors Project

Traditionally, efforts to prevent child sexual abuse have focused on teaching children to protect themselves. This presentation argues, however, that the perpetration of child sexual abuse can be prevented best through focused efforts on perpetrators and those at risk to perpetrate. The workshop reports on a collaborative project to review the literature on risk and protective factors for first-time perpetration of child sexual abuse and to create and promote empirically-based prevention efforts that target perpetrators and those at risk. Presenters provide a systematic review of factors associated with first-time perpetration of child sexual abuse, as well as the plans to disseminate that knowledge.

Since the Packard Foundation's journal, The Future of Children, focused on evaluation of home visiting programs for families with young children in 1999, practitioners and researchers from Healthy Families America (HFA) in 14 states formed a Research-Practice Council to examine home visiting implementation and quality issues in HFA. Workshop presenters highlight the main findings from the HFA implementation study. Results focus on family retention, intensity of services, and staff turnover. In addition to averages based on approximately 90 HFA sites, the study provides information on how much sites differ and site characteristics that may have an impact on those differences.

Ensuring the Protection of Child and Youth Participants Involved in Child Maltreatment Research

New research efforts benefit the field of child maltreatment and may provide avenues for enhancing interventions for children and families affected by child maltreatment. They also are accompanied by complexities and challenges unforeseen a decade ago. This workshop identifies the ethical challenges that emerge in instances when the goals of research conflict directly with the need to protect children's safety. Presenters discuss how to address these challenges, cite recent examples drawn from large-scale child welfare projects to illustrate, and review Federal guidelines and requirements regarding research ethics and pertinent Institutional Review Board matters.

Investigated or Supported? Families' Experiences of Re-Focused Social Work Practice in the United Kingdom

Since the mid-1990s, there have been attempts to re-focus social work practice in the United Kingdom from a child protection to a family support/service orientation. The alternative approach now advocated is to respond to all referrals initially as enquiries about the needs of children, based on an assessment of their circumstances rather than as child protection investigations. This session explores the twin premises underpinning the alternative approach, namely: a technical re-categorization of cases at the point of referral will lead social workers to change their practice; and families will experience the "family support enquiry" in a way that is fundamentally different to how families experience the "child protection investigation." The presenter cites data from a research study involving an analysis of the social work case files of 300 families.

Building Partnerships to Support Families Struggling with Child Abuse and Child Maltreatment

Two different collaborative models to strengthen families who struggle with substance abuse and child maltreatment have been created, implemented, and currently are under evaluation. A primary outcome of these models is the development and sustainability of interagency collaboration, as well as public-private partnerships to support these initiatives. This workshop provides an overview of each model, including approaches for identifying, developing, and sustaining partnerships, as well as the unique strengths and challenges associated with implementing projects in their respective communities. The session includes discussion of evaluation design and outcomes associated with building partnerships.

NCANDS in Depth: Lessons on Outcomes

The analysis of National Child Abuse and Neglect Data System (NCANDS) data has proven extremely valuable in providing an overview of child maltreatment issues. This workshop focuses on the analysis of child maltreatment reporting data, utilizing NCANDS and State reporting data. Emphasis is on implications for program improvement planning and monitoring. Each presenter offers specific findings pertinent to the analyses undertaken. These analyses identify and address key target populations, assess the impact of policies such as alternative response systems, and specify factors which point to possible unintended consequences of interventions. The session concludes with possible new directions for analyses.

Integrating Research and Practice into Direct Service Programming: Some Guiding Principles for Implementing Program Evaluation

This workshop presents an overview of the unique collaboration established between the University of Kentucky, Prevent Child Abuse Kentucky, and Blackburn Correctional Complex in the effort to formally evaluate the Fathers and Children Together (FACT) program, a prison-based parenting program. The session identifies the essential "Guiding Principles" that were developed and implemented to build the foundation of a successful and strong collaboration between practitioners and researchers. Presenters also discuss understanding the importance of program evaluation and recognizing when a program is ready for evaluation.

Research supports the concept that neglect, abuse, and trauma are a brain/body experience. The challenge now is to integrate effective holistic practices to help minimize the effects of abuse. In this highly interactive workshop, participants have an opportunity to learn and practice eight physical movements from Brain Gym 101. The session includes a brief review of brain development and a scientific explanation for physical movement effectiveness. The presenter also demonstrates how The Children's Place, a therapeutic day treatment program for children from six weeks of age to six years, is implementing Brain Gym in their programming.

to Violence: Spokane Safe Start

Under the Department of Justice's Safe Start program, Spokane, Washington, has implemented a crisis intervention and clinical service program to which police and other agencies can refer families when children are exposed to violence. Based on a detailed clinical research database, the program has developed descriptions of its intervention, violence incidents and child exposure, family risk and protective factors, family needs, child symptoms, and subsequent service involvement. This workshop presents the ongoing research program and discusses the partnership and clinical strategies used to create the program. The session identifies lessons learned and reports preliminary findings regarding the impact of the intervention.

Workshop presenters describe three approaches to strengthening and sustaining collaborative efforts between child welfare agencies and researchers to implement evidence-based parent training programs and incorporate them within child welfare systems. The intent of the session is to increase understanding regarding the behavioral needs of children in child welfare, convey information on several evidence-based parent training programs, and provide practical strategies for considering the adoption of these types of programs in additional locales.

SPECIAL EVENTS

Walking Tours of Boston

6:00 p.m. - 8:00 p.m.

SEE BOSTON AT HER BEST — BY FOOT! RAIN OR SHINE!

The Victorian Architecture of the Back Bay

Learn the history behind the Victorian architecture of Boston's infamous Back Bay during this 90-minute guided tour. The tour highlights one of America's richest collections of art and architecture. Its treasures include Trinity Church, the Boston Public Library, and stately rows of brownstone mansions. Remember to wear those good walking shoes and bring a warm jacket.

Cost: $10 pp

Transportation to and from the tour will be provided.

Beacon Hill

A National Historic District, Beacon Hill intrigues with its working gas lamps, ancient elms, and brick sidewalks. To add to the charm, its 19th-century row houses are protected by architectural restrictions. A wander down Mount Vernon Street shows the visitor Beacon Hill at its finest. Charles Bulfinch, Boston's Federal period architect and one of the developers of Beacon Hill, designed several buildings on this street, including the State House. Be sure to notice details as you walk along. Include Louisburg Square in your tour, the address most associated with Boston wealth and privilege. By daylight or at twilight, "The Hill" casts a spell of enchantment. (Please be aware that participants should be able to manage walking one mile, both uphill and on cobblestone streets.)

Cost: $10 pp

Transportation to and from the tour will be provided.

The Black Heritage Trail

Explore the history of Boston's 19th century black community with a walk along the Black Heritage Trail. Visit 10 historic sites, including stops at the Lewis and Harriet Hayden House, the Underground Railroad, and the Robert Gould Shaw and 54th Regiment Memorial, a testimony to the service of blacks during the Civil War. Explore the African Meeting House, the oldest standing black church in the United States, the center of political activity, and the very heart of the Heritage Trail. Also tour the Abiel Smith School, the nation's first public school for African American children. (Please be aware that participants should be able to manage a 1.6 mile walk.)

Cost: $10 pp

Transportation to and from the tour will be provided.

Keynote Address

Reverend Gloria Elaine White-Hammond, M.D.

Just Do It

A co-pastor of the Bethel African Methodist Episcopal Church in Boston and a pediatrician at the South End Community Health Center, Gloria White-Hammond confronts the issue of child abuse and neglect from multiple perspectives, including: as a devoted professional working to promote health and healing among children from some of Boston's most vulnerable communities; and as a humanitarian striving to address and redress the problem of the modern-day enslavement of southern Sudan's women and children. Her sense of urgency, however, comes from another critical source – as a survivor of childhood sexual abuse. In Just Do It, Dr. White-Hammond shares her personal journey from victim to victor. She reflects on the public culture that facilitates the ongoing victimization of children, emphasizing the need to confront this issue on policy and programmatic levels and for advocates to take heart in their efforts to tackle child abuse and neglect.

Mini-Plenary IV

Engaging State Legislators to Improve Child Welfare Oversight

This mini-plenary session focuses on engaging state legislators to use Child and Family Service Reviews and related state quality assurance efforts to improve their oversight of child welfare. The session identifies the various strategies state agencies have used to involve legislators in these reviews, as well as lessons from states that have forged partnerships with legislatures to support implementation of their Program Improvement Plans. Panelists include representatives of the National Conference of State Legislatures and the Administration for Children and Families in addition to a state legislator and a state child welfare agency administrator.

Poster Session 9

A University and Child Protective Services Collaboration to Provide Effective Parent Education

A university and a Child Protective Service (CPS) agency collaborated to provide an effective parent education program to families whose adolescent children were in protective custody or at risk of placement. This session focuses on the value of university-CPS collaboration; presents a method for delivery of parent education to families with adolescent children in CPS custody; identifies resources contributed by each group; and outlines ways to meet the challenges of implementing and maintaining the program. Initial evaluation data indicate that parenting skills are improved by program participation and that CPS staff find the program easy to administer.

Designing a Medical Home for Child Maltreatment Victims

Biological caretakers of children who have been maltreated have many parenting and psychosocial support needs which can be addressed in a medical home. This session describes the St. Barnabas Hospital Child Advocacy Center proposal for designing a medical home for children who have been maltreated to provide continuous child and family centered care and to help prevent recurrence of abuse. Objectives are to identify the parenting and psychosocial needs of biological caretakers of child abuse and neglect victims and to describe the services of a unique medical home for child abuse and neglect victims.

A Rural Southern Illinois Medical Network for Abused Children: From Dream to Reality

This session describes the methods and results of an innovative rural medical model of collaboration in the care of abused and neglected children. The Children's Medical Resource Network, a program of the Southern Illinois University School of Medicine's Department of Pediatrics, provides competent, compassionate, geographically accessible care to the children of rural Southern Illinois, making care available where there previously was no specialized care for abused and neglected children. It is a successful model of rural collaboration between a medical school, state child welfare agency, local Children's Advocacy Centers, law enforcement, and the judicial system and could be replicated in other states with significantly underserved rural populations.

Cultural Considerations in the Child Investigative Interview

128

Child interview specialists are under tremendous pressure to question children in a manner that is legally defensible and facilitates the overall investigation. Such an investigative mandate presents daunting challenges as children are not raised to be witnesses, and their perceptions and memories are limited by age, cognitive ability, environmental influences, and trauma. When child interview specialists must question children from different cultural backgrounds than those of the interviewer, the challenge becomes even greater. This session identifies and discusses critical cultural issues to be considered in the development of interviewing protocols and the training of effective interviewers.

Strength-Based Interventions for Children and Youth: Improving Outcomes through Evidence-Based Practice

The Home for Little Wanderers, a nonprofit child welfare agency, informs its direct practice work with up-to-date research gathered through Evidence-Based Practice Projects. This workshop focuses on one example of how researchers and practitioners worked together to shift treatment for children at a residential treatment center to a skills- and strength-based model. The presenters discuss research findings regarding strength-based treatment for youth; describe the process of using this research information to shift the therapeutic milieu from consequence-based to skills development based; and report outcomes reflective of the change, including restraint reduction and functional improvement indicators.

This workshop describes a community-based model of child abuse and neglect prevention programs, encompassing crisis nursery care, emergency shelter care, parenting education, respite care, in-home visitation, fathering, grandparents raising grandchildren, supervised access and visitation, and abuse/neglect prevention education. The presenter also tells how volunteers are recruited and integrated into these programs. Participants have an opportunity to learn the successful strategies that the Child Crisis Center of El Paso has used to bring together community agencies, schools, housing projects, churches, health care providers, and teen parent programs as a community collaborative to focus on preventing child abuse and neglect.

The Bridge between Research and Practice: A Study of Intensive Family Reunification

Workshop presenters address three topic areas of importance to practitioners and researchers in the ongoing effort to improve child and family outcomes in family reunification programs. The session first describes one agency's refinement and implementation of an existing intensive family reunification practice model. Secondly, the workshop presents the five-year agency-university partnership to evaluate a recently redesigned intensive family reunification services program. Third, the presenters discuss selected study findings from the fourth year of this five-year study, including data on approximately 130 families served by the program.

The Digital Divide in Child Abuse and How to Build the Bridges to the Future

This workshop both surveys the current capacity of publicly available Internet resources that provide support to professionals and presents examples of some workers in the field of child abuse who lack access to the Internet. The session discusses two models to illustrate how “Crossing the Digital Divide” can have a dramatic impact on the effectiveness of workers in the child abuse field: physicians specializing in child abuse overcame their traditional isolation and aversion to Internet technology to build a powerful network for mutual support; and a training model was used to establish an Internet bridge between the diverse fields of child abuse and disabilities. Presenters identify a strategy to provide parent aides/home visitors with the same Internet tools available to physicians and other professionals.

The Impact of Children’s Advocacy Centers: A Multi-Site Program Evaluation

A lack of data about whom Child Advocacy Centers (CACs) serve, what they do effectively, and what outcomes result has hampered development of policy, programs, and practice. This session reports the results of the most rigorous, comprehensive evaluation of CACs ever undertaken. The multi-site study was conducted by the University of New Hampshire in collaboration with four CACs in four different states. Each site collected case data from a CAC and from a comparison community that lacked a CAC. The sample totaled 1,615 cases, including 379 family interviews. The presentation examines the overall impact of CACs by comparing CACs and non-CAC communities on several research questions.

Westchester County, New York, has embarked on the second stage of an integrated services planning initiative, which brings together individuals and institutions from public and private sectors in a cross system collaborative effort to improve the health, safety, protection, and well-being of children and families in the county. This workshop describes the planning process, the interagency collaboration, the needs assessment, and the goals and objectives for this initiative, as well as addresses the risk/protective framework of the model. In addition, the session introduces a workbook designed to guide casework level staff, child care workers, and others in identifying early signs of developmental, educational, mental health, and behavioral issues for children at each stage of development through adolescence.

Hurry, Hurry! Responding to Parents Involved with Child Welfare Who Need Substance Abuse Treatment

Data are drawn from a mixed-method study of the impact of the Adoption and Safe Families Act on families with substance abuse issues who have had a child removed from their care. Presenters review findings regarding treatment access, the length of time it took to access treatment after a child entered substitute care, and treatment completion, as well as explore the relationship between treatment and key child welfare outcomes. The session also identifies barriers to accessing treatment and how well the child welfare agency, judicial system, and the substance abuse treatment system are meeting the needs of these families.

Child Caregiving Networks and Child Neglect:
Who Cares for the Children of Neglectful Parents?

Children rarely are cared for in total isolation. This session presents an exploratory and descriptive case study that examined the social support networks and child caregiving characteristics of a sample of neglecting parents. Answering the question of who takes care of the children of neglectful families involves a complex set of responses. Once information was collected regarding characteristics of the children, families, and caregivers studied, patterns surfaced. The presenter identifies 8 of the 17 propositions confirmed by the study.

Consistent Child Maltreatment Determinations:
Why They Are Necessary and How to Make Them

Research and clinical experience indicate that child maltreatment case determinations are influenced by many factors other than evidence regarding the alleged incident. In 2001, the Family Advocacy Program of the U.S. Air Force became concerned about this issue and commissioned a university study. The initial research suggested that nearly 50 percent of Air Force substantiation decisions were inconsistent with the written standards. Ambiguity in the maltreatment definitions then in force and a lack of standardization in the substantiation process contributed to the incorrect determinations. This workshop outlines the actions taken to develop new definitions and assessment and decision-making tools to address these issues.

Preventing Child Abuse and Empowering Families: An Evaluation of Crisis Nursery Service Outcomes

Presenters discuss the results of an evaluation of services provided by five crisis nurseries in a Midwestern state from 2000 to 2003. The session includes a brief history of crisis nursery development in the United States, describes crisis nursery services and the ways they support and empower families, reviews and interprets data that demonstrate the vital importance of the availability of emergency support services for young children and their caregivers, and identifies the important role crisis nurseries currently play in an integrated system of child welfare and mental health services for children and their families. An analysis of the data collected on key outcomes points to reduced parental stress and increased parenting skill among consumers of crisis nursery services.

Restructuring Child Welfare: Analysis of a Controversial Experiment in Florida

In May 1998, the Florida legislature mandated the transfer of responsibility for child protective investigations in three counties from the Department of Children and Families to the Sheriff's Offices in those counties, as well as the statewide privatization of foster care and related services by 2003. Administrative data provided by the Florida Department of Children and Families were used to evaluate both process and outcomes for the four child welfare models operating from 1995 through 2000 in Manatee, Lee, and Sarasota counties. This roundtable describes the context in which this experimental system reform was developed, the parameters of the theoretical debate and legislative history that informed the experiment, the organization and procedural changes that supported the experiment, and outcomes to date.

The Role of Early Childhood Programs in Improving Well-Being Outcomes for Children in the Child Welfare System

To prevent child abuse and neglect, as well as to provide early intervention and treatment to vulnerable children, child welfare and early education programs need to learn strategies to collaborate. By planning together and by developing joint interventions, they can focus on the outcomes of safety, permanency, and well-being of the children they both serve. This workshop adopts a strength-based approach, exploring specific opportunities for the child welfare and early childhood education systems to work together to promote prevention, early intervention, and treatment. The presenter also discusses strategies for involving fathers and other men in this work.

Professionalizing Rural Child Welfare Practice: Challenges and Opportunities for Social Work Education

Based on child welfare spending data collected through four rounds of a national survey, this presentation focuses on the efforts of a select few states to maximize resources. These financial resources include Titles IV-B and IV-E of the Social Security Act but also other Federal funding streams not typically regarded as child welfare funding streams. As states and localities continue to seek new methods of financing services in these tight fiscal times, the intent of the examples provided is to aid administrators and policymakers in their budgeting process.

Effects of Alcohol-Related Neglect on Cognitive, Emotional, Social, and Sexual Development and the Impact of Treatment

The effects of fetal exposure to alcohol on children have been noted in their cognitive, social, emotional, and sexual development. This workshop is designed to assist clinicians and case workers in assessing the effects of fetal alcohol on children, including physical anomalies and brain dysfunction, developmental delays, and secondary disabilities in adolescents and adults. Recommendations for treatment focus on cognitive impairment, the need for early enrichment, repetition in learning, and supervision in regard to sexual development. The session includes case examples.

Designing an Effective Cross-System Outcome Evaluation: Examples from a National Evaluation of Family Drug Courts

This workshop focuses on strategies for developing a cross-system outcome evaluation, citing the multi-method National Family Treatment Court Evaluation to provide examples. The presenter reviews the relevance and importance of cross-system evaluations, discusses design and implementation issues for such an evaluation, and introduces various designs and methodologies together with the strengths and weaknesses of each. In addition, the session presents data regarding the long-term child welfare, court, and treatment outcomes for families served via family treatment drug court systems.

Assessing Kinship Caregiver's Physical and Emotional Health: An Analysis of Coping Skills and Support Group Effectiveness

A study was conducted to gather demographic information on kin caregivers, assess their coping skills, measure their overall sense of physical and emotional health and well-being, and determine the effectiveness of support groups as an intervention. Twenty-five participants from support groups in Florida completed the Florida Kinship Center Demographic Survey, the Brief COPE scale, and the Physical and Emotional Health Survey. This workshop highlights some of the common characteristics of kinship caregiving families examined in the study. Presenters provide guidelines for addressing the negative emotional disturbances in the caregiver sample.

Therapeutic Child Care: Comprehensive Intervention for Traumatized Children in a Community-Based Early Education Center

An innovative partnership between a large inner-city child care and early education center and a university-based research and training program focuses on measuring the effectiveness of interventions for at-risk children from birth to five years. This workshop describes the partnership and addresses interventions in the classroom and with the family and child. Presenters also review research findings regarding the efficacy of the Pair Play Therapy intervention and the diverse developmental pathways in young children exposed to trauma as they relate to the risk and/or protective factors present in the face of child maltreatment. The session concludes that early childhood programs emerge as an ideal setting for comprehensive intervention.

School-Based Trauma Interventions

The workshop presents a school-based initiative designed to create more conducive learning environments for traumatized children. This session identifies the sequelae of trauma most likely to interfere with school success and presents a strategic intervention, which includes the creation of school-wide frameworks to weave trauma-sensitive approaches into the classroom and the broader school climate. Presenters outline a trauma-specific assessment and consultation model created to bridge the needs of traumatized children and the school professionals who must educate them, as well as share their statewide advocacy efforts to provide a trauma-sensitive learning environment for all children.

Challenging Workforce Retention Using a Research Agenda

150

A collaborative effort between the Fordham University Graduate School of Social Service and the Connecticut Department of Children and Families was initiated to enhance public child welfare recruitment and retention efforts. The project is based on the assumption that by enhancing management capacity through a range of activities such as training and mentoring, staff job satisfaction and retention can be influenced and show marked improvement. The workshop focuses on three project aspects: the use of the Departmental advisory committee for collaboration; design and implementation of the study; and the ways in which the study's findings informed planning for training and other activities to enhance management capacity.

Empowering Children in the Court System: The Child Advocate Model of Representation

Staging a hearing together with a client interview is the best way to demonstrate the role of the Child Advocate Model of Representation and how it can empower children and affect their outcomes. This seminar also includes an explanation of the American Bar Association Standards of Representation, which support this model, and the “considered judgment issue,” i.e., the standard to represent the child according to his/her expressed interest as long as the child has the ability to make reasoned decisions. The Child Advocate Model is built on the recognition that a child is a separate individual, and the attorney must advocate the child’s articulated position. This model, which is in direct contrast to the guardian ad litem, empowers children to participate in the decision making process and to offer input in decisions concerning their own lives and destiny.

Do Right by Kids: Recognizing and Reporting Child Abuse and Neglect

Prevention of child abuse and neglect depends on the skills of mandated reporters to recognize and then report cases in which there exists a reasonable suspicion of child abuse and neglect. This seminar presents Do Right by Kids, a newly developed, web-based training curriculum for mandated reporters. This training was developed via collaboration between the Monroe County Departments of Social Services, Public Health Communications, and the Center for Health and Behavioral Training in Rochester, New York. The curriculum is science-based and uses a behavior change approach to increase the skills of mandated reporters.

Using Inter-Dependency to Overcome Co-Dependency: A Community Transition to Family Treatment Drug Court

This skills seminar introduces participants to an effective family drug court collaborative developed by the City of Alexandria, Virginia. Its focus is to provide responsive services from an ecological perspective that alters traditional interventions and promotes effective outcomes for all family members. As a collaboration that works and continues to evolve, the Alexandria Family Treatment Drug Court provides a replicable process blueprint, including: overcoming organizational limitations; facilitating philosophical changes in service delivery; sharing ethical information; community ownership and support; shared and creative funding; and effective, timely outcomes that promote the safety and well-being of children.

A Study of Child Fatalities in New York City: Policy and Practice Implications

Child fatalities in New York City were examined at two points in time: child fatalities that occurred in the 1999 through mid-2001 period and child fatalities that occurred in 2003. This session focuses on the study methodology and its implementation, as well as the key demographics of the children whose deaths were investigated as the possible result of maltreatment. In addition, the presenter identifies risk factors for these children and families, critical practice issues, and key policy issues and their relevance to advocacy in New York City regarding strengthening responses to child endangerment.

What Really Helps Combat Secondary Trauma? Results of a Multi-Agency Study

Recent research and writing on the topic of secondary trauma (also known as vicarious trauma) among child welfare workers indicates that this is a significant problem for frontline workers and almost always concludes with recommendations for worker self-care. This workshop presents the results of a recent large-scale multi-agency study that examined the relationship between four different types of self-care on vicarious trauma scores for six different types of workers, including 179 child welfare frontline staff. The results demonstrate that effective self-care strategies differ for workers at different agencies so that recommendations must be specific to the work setting.

A Public Health Approach to Building Permanent Grassroots Collaboratives Dedicated to Preventing Child Sexual Abuse

Representatives from the Massachusetts Child Sexual Abuse Prevention Partnership and from collaborative efforts in three Massachusetts communities introduce an innovative pilot prevention strategy for applying a public health approach to building permanent public-private collaboratives to eradicate child abuse. A representative from each collaborative provides an overview of its community-specific Child Sexual Abuse Prevention Action Plan, which is a key component of this strategy and serves as a roadmap for their efforts. Collaborative representatives also outline organizational structures, short-term and long-term goals, and key accomplishments. The workshop includes a demonstration of how this new strategy integrates research with grassroots organizing.

To Tell or Not to Tell: Blocks and Problems in Forensic Interviewing

There often are factors influencing a child's ability to disclose. Such blocks or barriers may result from circumstances prior to the interview or arise during the interview itself. This workshop is designed to provide forensic interviewers, law enforcement investigators, child protection workers, and prosecuting attorneys with the ability to recognize circumstances that may create blocks for children while they recount their abuse. Professionals need to recognize the impact blocks and barriers may have on interviews and to assess continually for these impediments.

Reframing Child Abuse and Neglect:
An Agency/University/Community Partnership
Addressing Racial Disproportionality in Child Welfare

A three-year study conducted by a regional university at the request of the Texas Department of Family and Protective Services found the proportion of African American children in foster care to be identical to the proportion of African American children living in poverty in one East Texas County. This led to the creation of Project HOPE (Helping Our People Excel). The workshop describes the history and development of HOPE, beginning with agency determination to address racial disproportionality. Presenters discuss university research, the reframing of issues, community assessment by a social work class, formation of community partnerships, and positive outcomes for children, including a neighborhood one-stop center.

Identifying and Incorporating Different Case Management Approaches in Cases Involving Individuals with Disabilities

156

This workshop presents findings from a study examining child protection services to clients with disabilities and addresses the implications of these findings for child welfare practice. The study examined the prevalence of children with disabilities in the child protection system in a Midwestern state, as well as how counties provided child protection services to people with disabilities. In 2002, the statewide prevalence of children identified as having a disability in out-of-home placement as a percentage of all children ages 5 to 15 was 45.6 percent. Presenters discuss the considerable limitations of the administrative data, as well as possible explanations for the high prevalence rate.

Leading Great Groups through Trauma: Frontline Recovery and Resiliency

This seminar is designed to move beyond cognitive restructuring of trauma in the work place toward professional responsibility for supporting proactive change in all the systems that serve the vulnerable child client, i.e., self, team, family, organization, and community. Presenters address the impact of personal trauma history and ongoing life stressors on team communication and collaborative performance among partners in the child welfare setting. The session also focuses on understanding the difference between frontline leadership and management, identifying the implications for leading change through trauma and life stressors by means of enhanced reflection and individual analysis of respective leadership styles, and establishing an individual leadership plan for promoting self-care and improved professional performance.

Promoting Safety: Treatment of Sexualized Children

The Kennedy Krieger Family Center developed a specialized treatment program to address the mental health needs of sexually abused children with sexualized behavior, also known as the SMART (Safety Mentoring Advocacy Recovery Treatment) Clinic. It is the only program in the State of Maryland to focus on the specific issues of victimization and victimizing behavior for young and latency-aged children. Following an overview of pertinent theoretical perspectives, this skills seminar identifies the typology of sexually aggressive children and the impact of sexual abuse on the continuum of sexual development, the clinical strategies and interventions that are designed specifically to decrease problematic sexual behavior and address the trauma, the clinical considerations, and the role of community networking in serving these children.

Child Maltreatment in Child Care Settings: Experiences in North Carolina

Presenters review recent research and trends on child maltreatment in child care settings, addressing the risks associated with child care as well as the protective factors that seem to moderate these risks. The session reports the results of a collaborative study designed to assess child maltreatment in North Carolina child care settings. Analyses of data from all child maltreatment complaints in child care settings in FY2001-2002 indicate a significant relationship between child care setting quality indicators and the substantiation of child maltreatment complaints. Presenters also address the collaboration between child welfare and child care licensing and propose recommendations for future practice and policy.

illuminating Child Abuse in the Context of Human Experience

Donald C. Bross, Ph.D., J.D., Professor of Pediatrics at the University of Colorado School of Medicine and Director of Education and Legal Counsel for the Kempe Children's Center of the University of Colorado Health Sciences Center, addresses child abuse in the context of its connection and significance to critical problems in contemporary human experience. He identifies the broad range of contributors to progress in understanding, preventing, and treating child abuse, ranging from the fields of social work, psychology, and pediatrics to new forms of imaging and genetics. Dr. Bross notes the current attention directed to encouraging "ownership" of the problem on the part of the child and family and suggests a focus on the trauma inflicted on developing children by family members as the richest potential source for further illuminating child abuse and thus improving the human condition.

The following video will be shown on Wednesday and Saturday.

Inclusion

Volume 1: Focus on Toddlers & Pre-K

Exceptional modeling

Volume 1 clips show teachers, child care providers, and parents working with children in care settings: preschool, Head Start, and at home. Emphasis is on learning how to support non-typically developing children in a variety of social settings. This video teaches viewers how to sharpen their observation skills, how to model ways to support and encourage children, and how to adapt their environment to the needs of the child. Vignettes illustrate friendship building and fostering a child's independence.

Clips in Volume 1 include:

Clip 1: All Around with Eric.

A wheelchair and braces don't stop Eric from participating at circle time, choice time, story time, as well as outside on the playground.

Clip 2: Katelyn Can!

Mom's supportive and respectful tone encourages her severely disabled daughter to successfully complete a hands-on project.

Clip 3: Nicholas Explores.

In a busy parent/toddler classroom, the smallest child occupies center-stage: climbing, sliding, and experiencing his share of bumps and falls.

Clip 4: Crashing through Walls.

A teacher strives to support two boys at different developmental levels during a turn-taking game on a slide.

Clip 5: First Day Meltdown.

When a child has an intense emotional outburst, his teacher moves in quickly to keep him safe and help him to calm down.

Clip 6: Pals.

In this preschool classroom, the environment contributes to stimulating conversation and friendship between a non-typically developing boy and his peers.

Clip 7: Everyone's on the Ball.

A younger sister's therapy becomes a natural, playful part of family life.

Clip 8: Larisha Goes to School.

Teachers encourage a child with a walker to expect she can succeed and to be more independent.

Audience: Teachers, parent educators, child care providers for infants and toddlers

Length: 35 minutes

Touchpoints (3 Volume Set)

This three-video series features noted pediatrician T. Berry Brazelton who describes challenges that arise when spurts in development bring a new sense of independence in young children. He refers to these times as "touchpoints," when parents must decide how to support a child's development.

Volume 1: Pregnancy, Birth, and the First Weeks of Life

Expectant couples discuss their concerns: Will my baby be okay? Will I be a good parent? Brazelton demonstrates the competencies of newborns and explains how to interpret their behavior.

Volume 2: First Month through the First Year

This video features parents describing the different cries of their newborns. Brazelton shows how to comfort a fussy baby, explains the stages of sleep, and traces the growth of independence. He explains the meanings of negativism and tantrums and suggests ways to avoid battles.

Volume 3: One Year through Toddlerhood (not featured in this film forum presentation)

Audience: Home viewers and parent educators for infants and toddlers

Length: 45 minutes per volume
